UNDERCLASS SCRAPS

Announcement is made that Student Council has set aside tomorrow afternoon for the observance of two of Penn State's annual underclass encounters, the tie-up scrap and the football scrap.

Underclassmen, and particularly the second year men, should welcome this opportunity to atone for their gross indifference to affairs of this kind as evidenced by their failure to appear on the scene of encounter some few weeks ago when a sorry attempt was made to stage the annual tie-up scrap.

In connection with the second scrap on the program for this week-end, the annual gridiron clash between the underclass eleven, it might not be amiss to openly call the attention of Penn State students in general to the fact that the first year men are not supporting their team.

The dire lack of interest in the fortunes of their own eleven coupled with flagrant failure on their part to render moral support and encouragement when they see their team on the short end of the score is something that strikes at the very heart of Penn State spirit.

Freshmen who appear dull and slow at comprehending in this respect might well be given material aid by the positive efforts of sophomores and upperclassmen.

It is hazardous, indeed, to allow the first year men to shape the dominant tone of the college through sheer weight of numbers. If other methods fail, rough-shod means of instilling loyalty are entirely justifiable as a means to an end.

LET THE FRESHMEN HELP

The two million dollar campaign for health and welfare buildings at Penn State is still in progress. As a result of the untiring efforts of college officials, faculty members, students, alumni, and friends of the college, the fund total now stands at approximately $1,500,000.

One of the most wholesome features of the campaign as pursued last year was the whole-hearted moral and material support of the undergraduates. A student drive with a goal of one hundred thousand dollars was launched in connection with the major campaign and preceding the opening of the state-wide drive.

Within the next few weeks, it is planned to launch a similar undergraduate drive on a smaller scale, confining the privilege of subscribing to new students at Penn State this year.

A goal of one hundred percent participation is not too high. One hundred dollars a man is not too much to pledge. For, in the event of a great state university supplanting the college of today, it is, of a certainty, the members of this year's freshman class who will benefit most materially.

A PERNICIOUS PRACTICE

Attention is called to several complaints that have been voiced recently by indignant undergraduates relative to the untimely disappearance of coats, hats and other personal articles of wear from racks in the corridors where they have left them unsuspectingly while attending classes. Other protests, of a fewer number, came from students who claim to have been left on the short end of an unfair exchange.

Practices of this nature and individuals who commit them purposely are deserving of unspeakable contempt. And indications point to the fact that they have been committed, apparently, with a purpose.

There is a chance that an individual may walk off with another man's coat, thinking it his own, but sooner or later he is sure to discover the mistake. And such a person, if he be honest, will take advantage of the lost notices to effect an immediate return.

Truly, this is an evil of an insidious nature. It must be stopped ere its undermining influence spreads too far. Penn State's proposed Honor Code, covering all forms of lying, cheating and stealing, can not come too soon.

Thoughts of Others

LESS EXPENSE

As sophomore men approach their year when they would like to bring girls from places other than Smith St. Holloway are confronted with the expensive proposition of providing lodging for their guests while they are in Amherst.

The financial problem could be conveniently solved if the hop committee could arrange for a voluntary consent to have one of the fraternity houses reserved for the use of the visiting girls.

Such a plan for the lodging of girls would not cause the inconvenience that it does at Penn State because the men forced to create their rooms could do so at other fraternity houses, only two or three men having to be lodged with each fraternity.

IN APPRECIATION

The most hospitable lunch we ever ate! That is the unanimous opinion of the soccer squad concerning Nittany treatment at Penn State. The squad from the State-George Tech football game from the side lines.

We are indebted to Penn State for an very pleasant visit to the College and especially we want to thank the following: Houses and Fraternities, Friends Union, Phi Kappa Psi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Chi Sigma Chi, Sigma Phi Sigma, Omega Epsilon.

Advanced Standing Report Is Given

The following report on admission with advanced standing this fall has been prepared by Dr. E. V. Moore, Acting College Examiner in the absence of Dr. C. D. Matquardt.

Gridiron Gossip

Sleep, study and movies is the program for tomorrow the first Saturday that the Nittany Lion has been late since the season opened.

"Be" has been sharpening the Lion's claws all week, and when the wild Panther is encountered on Thursday, a real battle of the Jungle is assured.

The story in the magazine section of the "Public Ledger" about Penn State's marred play contains a moral according to "Pop" Ellwood, the says, "Get married while in college and get popular in the attic."

Penn of Council, the youngest college football captain in the country today, is the leading scorer of the year with a total of eighty-six points. Tyrone of Colgate and Harry Wilson come second and third.

Pitt players have been invited to attend the Notre Dame-Lafayette Tech game at Forbes Field on Saturday as the guests of the Tech management.

And we can assure you that "Pop" Warner's men will be much more active, watching Carnegie Tech players than playing against them.

Some superstitious freshmen said that every time Harry Wilson plays, it means bad luck for the opposing team.

It used to be that Lehigh would take the "Best Lafayette" cry before the annual Thanksgiving Day battle. This year, Lafayette has taken up "Beat Lehigh" yell. How times do change!

We would suggest that you take your lunch along when waiting in line at the Athletic Association office to get your tickets for the Pitt game. It reminds one of a Russian bread line.

Syracuse competitors of Penn State and Notre Dame, flushed with a victory over Notre Dame meet tomorrow in the biggest inter-collegiate clash of the day.

In their annual all-Frislin Field football selection, Philadelphia sportswriters will have to look no further than the Penn State team.

a few other teams, that have all these should have a few seconds and third sitting candidates, from their respective squads.

The championship of the "Big Three" will be at stake tomorrow when Harvard and Yale clash. Old Eli is the big favorite but John Harvard is famed for often jumping in just where he is not wanted.

"Hinkey" Dimes is out of the lineup of the Bradford Yellowjackets' professional grid team, for the rest of the season on account of an injured leg.

Recent Pitt graduates are making good as college coaches this year. Hugh McCracken has a championship team at Allegheny while Tom Holloman and "Tommy" Davies have great teams at Thiel and Geneva.

With pleasant memories, we recall the West Virginia game when after the battle, someone yelled "Moonshine for sale" and we were almost killed in the rush to find out that it was only the comic publication of the school.

This football season has led us to believe that the official Penn State yearbook for a week-end trip consists of the convention of labelers and sheep-din.
