YEARLINGS WIN EASILY IN ANNUAL MIT SCRAP

 Freshman had proven his superiority especially in the third round when he knocked the sophomore boxer to the mat with an uppercut, but only for an instant.

In the 160-pound class Labe sophomore was awarded a technical knockout in the third round over those Freshman. The sophomore was awarded a decision over Kurland freshman in the fourth round. The sophomore assumed the aggressive early and held it throughout the entire bout although both men exchanged heavy blows.

The final bout between Philo sophomore and Lesko freshman ended in a draw after an extra round failed to show either man superior over his opponent. Philo was on the aggressive the greater part of the time, but Lesko responded with numerous blows that kept him on a par throughout the meet. Trip Frank and Manager Kistler acted in the capacity of judges.

 trouble which though he managed to secure a fall from the Pennsylvania 141 in their recent bout.
 Strong 145-Pounders
 The field of 175-pounders is probably the strongest in the tournament. Will Leggett will have to contend with Benjamin A. Columbian who has won every bout this year. Leggett held Pennsylvanian's who went an extra period with Will in their bout here, and Glen a capable contender.
 Captain Butters, of Princeton and Whites of Yale will be the most serious contenders for Bill Hickey's championship title. Whites is the son of Coach Whites' 121 mentor and has dropped only one bout and that one to Luttrell.

Parthimore Good Bet
 Johnnie Parthimore has the chance of a lifetime for gaining wrestling fame tomorrow night. White from Pennsylvania is the only real obstacle between him and the 175-pound Intercollegiate championship. The Red and Blue representative went into extra periods with Parthimore in their clash but the National veteran should take the bout. Luck from Lehigh has a chance of reaching the finals.
 Competition is again close in the 175-pound class. Russell, of Yale 184-year's champion loomed up as the briliest man Rimbough has to face. Russell has won each of his bouts through this year. Burke is also a tough proposition. The Lehigh 141 has taken all but one of his bouts.
 Cann Referees
 The law of averages picks Afteld of Cornell for top honors in the unlimited division. He is easily the outstanding man, having won all his settes easily. Aulick may score some points for Columbia and Melsahn is also in the running. The latter was heavy weight on Coach Leonard's Brooklyn 160 prep team for three years. Jules Prevost, however, has shown remarkable improvement, especially in the last few meets, and he stands a good chance of giving the favorites some strong opposition.
 W. L. Cann coach of the American Olympic wrestling team, and Harris, coach at the Stevens Institute in Hoboken, have been secured as the referees for the bouts today and tomorrow.

THE FLAME THAT FIRES

COLLEGE athletic teams illustrate forcibly one truth—men achieve by inspiration. The bleachers' cry of "Hold 'em! Hold 'em!" has kept many a goal line uncrossed. "Touchdown! Touchdown!" has scored countless victories.

In an engineering organization like Westinghouse, this inspiration comes from engineering executives—men who correlate, organize, administer, and inspire. They are engineers first, but engineers with the power to enlist the best of other men.

Many derived their own first inspiration from the Founder, George Westinghouse himself. He took a contract for electrifying the New Haven Railroad, for example, before the apparatus had even been designed.

"Now I've dropped you into the middle of the pond," he told his engineers. "It's up to you to swim out."

There was plenty of swimming—but Westinghouse knew his swimmers.

As has been true since organization began, the demand for men who can develop into leaders is far, far short of the supply. Westinghouse welcomes them. All industry welcomes them. Organizations lead because men, in turn, lead them.

This advertisement is seventh in a vocational series, outlining the fields for engineering achievement in the Westinghouse organization. A copy of the entire series will be sent to anyone requesting it.
