Sailing West to India SINCE the days of Christopher Columbus men have felt the call to "sail due west to find India." In an organization like Westinghouse, such pioneering spirits find happy haven as research engineers. Their every thought is a question—every energy bent to discover new and more effective answers to baffling problems. Immediately Westinghouse began to build alternating current machines of high voltages, for example, the problem of insulation became acute. For thirty-five years high voltages and insulation have formed an endless chain of problems. As voltages have been increased, improved insulation has been demanded. As insulation has been bettered, voltages have been still further increased. One striking contribution of Westinghouse research engineers has been the perfection of an entirely new insulation material—Micarta. Possessing many of the qualities of metal, paper, fiber, mica, gum, rubber, Micarta differs in radical respect from all of these. It saves industry indirectly as improved insulation material, and also directly because of superiorities when used for gears, propeller blades, and the like. Only the imagination can set a limit on the field for the research engineer—or for an organization that centers around him. This advertisement is one of a vocational series outlining the fields for engineering achievement in the Westinghouse organization. A copy of the entire series will be sent upon request.
