Professional and College Football Travel in Separate Orbits, Says Bez

Will professional football finally prove the death of amateur college football, or can the two exist as contemporaries, each serving different clientele and demanding different types of players? This question has been subjected to wide debate...

Until now this debate has been limited to the Nittany gridiron, but at last we are in the midst, for Hugo Berdek, coach of the Penn State football team, has announced his intention of preparing for his own team...

A college staff should be criticized for choosing a professional career only, says Coach Hezdek, if by the action he sacrifices his diploma...

We cannot have professional football start into the intercollegiate game of vice-versa, it often is to have the professional followers will watch their favorite teams and collegiate enthusiasts will root for the red or the blue but neither group will support interclass games for favor players recruited from the ranks of one class by the other...
