ANNUAL REPORT SHOWS GROWTH OF PENN STATE

The College from April 1921 to last September, contains in part a comparison of the College when he came to its scope of service when he resigned.

Nears Four Thousand Mark

It shows that the student body grew from 2835 to 3537 in the four years, the faculty and extension representatives increasing from 575 to 746. Most of the faculty growth has been in extension work where the College was able to meet the increased expense by fees, for state appropriations remained virtually stationary over the period. The faculty includes 369 extension men and women, an increase from 251 employed in 1921.

Summer session attendance increased from 1310 to 1933. The College also attained a new record last year in the total number of people reached through resident and extension classes and through correspondence courses, a grand total of 22,976 individuals, which is compared favorably with 11,330 in 1921.

In the four years a new School of Education was organized, a Graduate School was established and the School of Natural Science was reorganized into the School of Chemistry and Physics. In all but one school student enrollments were advanced, and in the School of Liberal Arts it was practically doubled because of the unusual demand for business courses. The report is contained in a book of 142 pages and a section is devoted to each school, academic and administrative departments, in which deans and department heads tell of the activities of the year.

The scenery was designed and executed by H. N. Pendleton '28 and is in keeping with the tone of the play. With an unusually long run in New York, "The Goose Hangs High" was just as successful among amateurs. Tickets may be secured at the box office at seven-fifteen o'clock tonight for fifty and seventy-five cents.

"BEZ" STATES VIEWS ON PROFESSIONAL FOOTBALL

centered about play for the love of the game, but in the professional game what is it? Love or pay? "Bez" makes no comment on the action of several individuals who, by their adoption of professionalism, drew such publicity throughout the country last fall. He merely says in regard to the large salaries which they are reported to draw, that every cent is well-earned. Professionalism is a hard master and demands a great toll from the football player. In many instances, a man is greatly harmed both physically and mentally by a single season of hard play. Many prophecies have been made concerning the future of intercollegiate football but then they are no more than supposition. On this ground the Nittany mentor declines to attempt a prophecy but he does admit that he feels no immediate worry. No one can rightfully say what may evolve in the field of sports in the next twenty-five years. A quarter of a century ago, golf was known only to a few, now it is in the sport spotlight throughout the year.
