STYBORSKI TOPS NITTANY HITTERS

Sty Styborski who has hit four home runs in the three games he has batted on this season leads all the hitters on the Penn State baseball team according to the hitting averages appearing below. Sty has been pounding the horsehide at a 666 gait for three contests.

The real leader is Kent, lead-off man, with an average of .150. Kent has played every game on the schedule thus far. The third baseman got off on the wrong foot in the Juniata tie playing through that contest without a hit. It has been through consistent batting in the other four battles that he has compiled his .150 mark.

Cy Lungten has the next highest mark with a .268 average for all the five settes. Captain Wilson is the only other regular above the .100 figure, having connected for seven safeties in twenty-one times at bat for a .333 mark.

Page who has been in three hits is the nominal runner-up man for hitting honors, having compiled an even .500 average.

The Ursinus and Dickinson games have wreaked havoc with both the individual and team batting averages. Prior to the last two battles the team average was well over the .300 mark but since has dropped to a .271 average.

The averages follow:

Varsity Nine Engages Midshipmen Tomorrow

(Continued from first page) Dickinson were held hitting for the remainder of the contest. Signor, a freshman pitcher his last game for the Carlisle battery, had the Lion slugger baffled by his slow curves. He weakened, however, late in the game and Robertson, former Ridley Park high school athlete, relieved him and prevented further scoring.

Dickinson Shows Strength For five innings Penn State could not get a hit and score one tally against the mound work of Signor. In the sixth Styborski found one to his liking and sent the ball far into left field for his third career clout of the season. This brought the count to two against the visitors three.

The seventh proved the downfall of the Dickinson hurler Haines, first up, smacked a one base hit to right. Kent singled to left. Lungten laid down a well-placed bunt and all the sacks were populated. Lesko forced Kent at third, Haines scoring and when the opposing third sacker threw wild attempting to get Lesko at first Lungten also tallied. Lesko pulled up at third Styborski then removed all doubt of the ultimate victor when he poked out his second home run of the tilt and his fourth in three games with a titanic wallop to center scoring Lesko ahead of him.

Trackmen Favored To Defeat West Virginia

(Continued from first page) collegiate outdoor and indoor championships will be missed in the scoring. Crip will, however, take the field against Glenn, Morrison and Donovan in the 220-yard low hurdles.

D'Auto will lead three of his teammates in the 220-yard dash against a flock of Nittany runners headed by Torrence. The latter, like Moore, has been unable to reach his best form, and the performance of the Lion veterans will give Coach Cattmell a line on his chances in the intercollegiate 410-Yard Dash.

In the 410-yard sprint Torrence and Karbach lead the Penn State entries. With the speedy Stender running in this event the Penn State quartermilers can look for a sharp battle. Taylor's rapid improvement in the half-mile promises a scramble for points in that race. Stender, Moigan and Baringer are the West Virginia entrants.

For the past week Nate has had his distance men in a steady drill. Stewart, Poirac and Helfrich, the mileers, will have to stand off Callaway, a runner who has made a spectacular record for the Mountaineers. Callaway is also entered in the two-mile against Barclay, Reis, Johnson and Huskins.

Field Events With the exception of several sprint events, Penn State seems to have the better rounded team. On paper, they are stronger in the field than are their opponents.

Bates, whose broad-jumping at the Penn Relays, brought him into prominence, will have to repeat his performance to show his 23 feet 3 1/2 inch leap was not a mere spark. Mathias, a two-year veteran, is another point winner in the broad jumping. With Michalske, Reed and Weston in the discus, and Ide in the hammer throw, Penn State has a formidable field quartet. Roberts has shown flashes of ability with the javelin. Bates and Sullivan are entered in the high jump. This duo and Page are also in the pole vault.

Stickmen Encounter Syracuse Tomorrow

The Orange stickmen have four impressive victories to their credit this season, one of which was against the Oxford-Cambridge team. Other victories were over Rutgers, Stevens and Cornell. Two years ago a combination from Syracuse toured England where it met the best British lacrosse team. Because it has turned out a winning combination for the past ten years the Orange has become internationally noted for its lacrosse teams.

Syracuse Training Method Lacrosse has been developed at Syracuse by a method that keeps the varsity always supplied with experienced men. From the time of its establishment at the university, the game has been played by four teams there. At the present time these aggregations, the freshmen, the junior varsity, the second team and the varsity are independent of each other, following individual schedules.

This system enables a man to take up lacrosse as a freshman at Syracuse and move up through the other teams, during which time he receives valuable training. Until last year no man who had not filled a berth on one of the three primary teams played on the varsity. The championship teams turned out by Syracuse can be traced back to this method of development. In preparation for tomorrow's contest, Coach Leonard has been drilling his men in offensive plays that he hopes will penetrate the Orange defense. Those plays that were tried for the first time in the St Stephens contest have been further developed for use in tomorrow's battle.

Paying particular attention to body checking the defense men have been working on methods for halting the efforts of the guards more accurately, Coach Leonard has had them running at the football dummy, "taking it out," as they would an opposing attack.

Probable Lineup The probable lineup for Syracuse is as follows: goal, Barclay; point, Levy, cover point, Harrington, first defense, Gray; second defense, Captain Hansen, third defense, Clarke; center, Bizik; third attack, Ralph; second attack, Stoddard; first attack, Painter, in home, Kopkind; out home, Hill. The stars of the New York combination are Hill, Stoddard, Levy, Gray and Captain Hansen. Penn State's lineup will likely be the same that started last week, with the exception of a possible change in the home positions.
