WE DEPART TO RETURN AGAIN

As this is read, State College will be emptying itself slowly of the students who have made Penn State for the past year; the students who have upheld its traditions, who have fought for Penn State on the athletic field and on the platform, the students who have made Penn State a force in the world of education.

Vacations will be spent—how, shall we say—industriously. And then, as once more we return to the valley in the heart of Pennsylvania after having been separated from the sight of Old Main for more than two months, we certainly must feel that Pennsylvania after having been separated from the sight of Old Main for more than two months, we certainly must feel that Pennsylvania after having been separated from the sight of Old Main for more than two months, we certainly must feel that Pennsylvania after having the sight of the same sequences. State next year is to continue on its forward way-that it is our College and it is what we make it.

As we depart,

"Regret, as for a vanished fragrance, haunts us,

And life, falls, like a full blown rose, apart."

And as we return, confident that a new President will lead Penn State upward and onward, (and possibly see the assumity of daily chapel) it will be our task to make the words "Penn State" signify all that is worthy of praise.

VALETE AC PLAUDITE

Another college generation is thrust into the whillhool of ac-Another conge generation is thrust into the winning of ac-tivity, its philosophy almost complete as it goes from one world to another, its high ideals waiting to be tried. Diplomas and hon-orary keys, distinctions though they be, are merely time-cards, punched finally as the day ends. They are but tags, classifica-

Four years ago this generation set out on a journey. Many of, its men and women dropped by the wayside until, when the goal is reached, only the worthy remain. To these five hundred and fifty—to the men and women who are to carry Penn State's name with them in their upward struggle—"Farewell, and give applause,"

NUMBERS, PLEASE?

Of all the misbegotten, foolish systems of competition carried on at Penn State, the most glaring is that of interclass sports Along toward this time of the year, after the Varsity season in most spring sports has run itself almost out, the various classes stage their annual set-ups and comedies in tennis, golf, baseball, checker and what set-ups and comedies in tennis, checkers and what-not.

Unless a man has his nu he is marked as friendless. If he has his numerals, usually he's afraid to wear them. Why not make them mean something besides an opportunity to wise-crack? Why not have class spinstead of class farces?

Under the present system, and noticeable to the greatest extent in the upper classes, the manager of the class team is chosen by the president of the class. The manager takes one or two of his fraternity brothers in tow and has them make out a list of two or three friends who have not yet been able to take advantage of "the old army game." Then, with a team picked in this way, the class of so-and-so plays the class of such-and-such, whose team is picked in a like manner. The luckiest crowd wins. Everyone gets his "numbers."

Football is perhaps the only sport in which the award is not desecrated by interclass contests. Because of the large number of men from the three upper classes who practice throughout the season, it is possible to chose experienced men to compose class teams. Cannot this same system be applied to all other sports? Unless it can, numerals will soon be relegated to the ash can and will never cease to be the subject of many guffaws in the Froth office.

SPRINGTIME NONSENSE

SPRINGTIME NONSERSE

See those funny vellow shekers come a gleaming through the arm, Ashmurg and a fluckering with rivulets that than Down a fellow's shoetors, or around his fancy hose, To make the gandy colors run or drown out all his toes. On through the storm and downpoin they keep trooping on to class Like animated diffoldly awalking through the grass, Now a trival to the color bright has grouped around Old Man; At foot of stone and wy after April's sun and rain Has burst a myriad of branches into yellow blooms at diwn And the winty wines, are progress, with those, yellow shekers on And the winter twigs are gorgeous with their vellow
