

Poultry Science Men Conclude Convention

All phases of the egg industry including scientific marketing and the care of a flock of modern methods were under consideration by the Poultry Science Association at its meeting here recently.

Prominent men from all over the United States brought to the assembly their findings through investigations, while the idle moments of the members were spent in visiting places of importance and interest within the Nittany Valley.

Deeming that the former name, "American Institute of Instructors and Investigators in Poultry Husbandry," was too long, the society voted to adopt one shorter: "Poultry Science Association." At the close of the convention, Prof. L. E. Card of the University of Illinois, was elected president and the gathering for 1927 called for Ottawa, Canada.
