Orators Hit Practical Tendency in Education

(Continued from first page) system which our orators are accustomed to, consists of collecting evi-dence and giving it logically in an on-tertaining manner rather than for-mally dividing the argument into definite issues.

Affirmative Argument

The humor injected into the discussion by both sides added to the interest of the debate. The affirmative contended that the practical courses the rest of the humanities, he must 13

turn to baser pleasures for his enter-tainment.

The negative maintained that the present system of practical education has developed in response to a need. has developed in response to a need. They argued that this stage is one of specialization and that the colleges must supply men trained for one narrow field of endeavor. They pointed out the fact that modern life is zery complex and that the individual with a liberal education cannot compets with men well trained in one thing.

At the conclusion of the debate an open forum discussion was held. The audience favored the affirmative side by a margin of eleven votes. Dr. W. S. Dye acted as chairman.
