DOLLARS AND NON-SENSE

Celebrating the University of Pennsylvania's final victory over Princeton in the Eastern Intercollegiate Basketball League, a wild crowd of Penn students paraded the streets of Philadelphia early last Wednesday morning...

With victory in the air and Spring close on its heels, the mob, no doubt, felt disposed to frivolity and justified in broadcasting the success of old Pennsylvania regardless of the resulting damage and color...

THIS BELIEVING WORLD

The average college undergraduate usually thinks of the Princeton student as a handsome, learned man, well-dressed in his tilted derby, snug Chesterfield coat and distinctive spats...

The Playgoer

There seems to be considerable doubt among the cognoscenti about the correct attitude to adopt in polite company when the Penn State Playgoer's performance of "Beyond the Horizon" comes up for discussion...

The Bullosopher's Chair

Smithers - I noticed you were one of the select few who donned their social armor to help christen the Penn State "S" banquet Saturday night.

Smithers: What else? What else? After that, I'm prepared for the worst. "You resent my criticism, yet would lead me on. Well, if I must - The entertainment was very unwise...

Smithers: Amen! "Not at all. Not at all. The menu was carefully prepared and the dishes were served with professional proficiency. But to revert to the program, I can't help feeling that a musical selection, alternated with a speech...

was hard at times to tell which was the dreamer, Robert or Andrew. And so with the rest of the characters. There was no truth about them. They entered the scene in doubt and left completely at sea.

Letter Box

Editor, The Penn State Collegian State College, Pa. Dear Sir: I am disgusted! Many people get that way quite often but it is seldom that such a mood strikes me for by nature I am an unusually peace-loving and easy-going chap.

After all, we did not attend "Beyond the Horizon" to be informed that our neighbor had a friend in the east. No! We wish to be reminded constantly that we had paid fifty, seventy-five cents, or a dollar for the privilege of watching a poor performance.

In this drama there was a story that appealed to a greater number of people but the acting of that play was also really good, so good in fact that we were expecting another good show Saturday night.

As a whole, as I mentioned before, the play was--well, I do not know how to state it unless I call it deplorable. Nevertheless there were several good bits of acting. "Robert Mayo" was well acted throughout the play, the voice sounded rather poetic, just what one would expect for such a character and the impractical being that he was. But why, oh why, could not the other players act natural?

Returning to our room and both of us being lovers of plays, that is good play, we got into a little "bull-session" over the presentation of Saturday night. In the first place we decided that the actors had not come up to the standard set by the actors chosen for the previous presentations.
