ESPENSHADE PLANS TRIP TO HONOLULU

Prof. Espenshade will teach only six hours a week in English composition. He will make the experiment of trying to stimulate his new students to do some creative writing.

Prof. Espenshade's textbook on Rhetoric has sold more than 400,000 copies. His book "Pennsylvania Place Names" was published several years ago by the College. He has edited "Forensic Declamations," and in collaboration with President John M. Thomas "Bible Readings for Schools and Colleges."

UKRANIAN YOUTH EDITS NEWSPAPER

Heer unfinished in New York and took his mother to Boston. There he supported his mother and paid his college expenses by the income from various jobs. He was a messenger boy for a telegraph company in Boston. He dressed windows in Boston stores. He gleaned bits of news for the Boston papers. It was hard plugging, Hyman agreed, but now he has almost completed his four years of study. And he has supported his mother, too. After graduation this year, Hyman will step into the world of journalism.
