WOMEN'S COUNCIL REVISES RUSHING

Campus Clubs and Fraternities Adopt New Rules for Next Semester

Devising a new system of rushing rules the Campus Clubs Council will endeavor to aid the rushing problem of the women's clubs and fraternities at Penn State.

With its object to eliminate the endless personal rushing of the various groups, it is hoped that this plan will give each club a fair chance for pledging.

The new rules provide that no girl shall be rushed until she has attended college at least one college year. The only exception to this ruling is in the case of seniors who may be bid after one semester's residence.

Organize Rushing Parties One of the new rules under this system provides that there shall be no personal rushing which incurs the expenditure of money.

These parties may be held within a period of five days, beginning with the first Monday after the college begins its sessions.

Each group shall present an itemized expense account of the organized rushing party to the committee on rushing and initiation three days after the party.

Penalize Violators The period of silence shall begin midnight the Friday of the last party and shall continue until the noon of the following Tuesday.

Another innovation included in the revised code decrees that any club or fraternity exceeding the allotted amount for the organized party shall be allowed only one-half of the allotted amount to be spent for the organized party the following year.

Twelve students were initiated as charter members of Commons club, local non-fraternity organization, last week.

David L. Paraska '30 was named president, Edna C. Barnes '30, vice-president; Athlio D. Santucci '32, recording secretary; Leslie E. Kurlberg '32, corresponding secretary; and Harold N. Drebbelis '31, treasurer.
