

'NO GLORY FOR WORKER' CHICAGO HEAD DECLARES

Inherent Splendor Attributed to Student Labor Called Myth

The "inherent" splendor connected with working one's way through college is a myth according to R. M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago.

President Hutchins declares that the belief is based on the Calvinistic doctrine that in adversity there is victory. He remarked that a college course should be the acquisition of a liberal education, not learning in petty economics the exact distance that a dollar bill will stretch.

'Y' Secretary Says Penn State Men Lead as Students

"Of the ninety colleges I have visited, I find Penn State students do more actual studying than the students of any other of these student groups," declared Harry W. Seamans, Y. M. C. A. secretary, during an interview yesterday.

The best evidence of this fact is the absence of loitering students on the streets and student roughneck parties, Mr. Seamans states.

During the Christmas holiday period Mr. Seamans made an inspection of his nineteenth college when he visited the campus of the University of Maryland.

"In most cases I have seen the colleges in operation and have conferred with prominent members of the faculty or administration," the secretary asserted. He continued by stating that most of his visits have been of three or four days duration, so that his observations have been of a casual nature.

"The University of Illinois, although considerably larger than Penn State, probably comes nearest to attaining a similar atmosphere to that found here," he asserted, "and there probably is the nearest resemblance to Penn State's degree of studiousness."

"Princeton is the leisurely man's college modeled closely after the English type of university, where students are urged to work on a research basis," he added, "while Yale is the school that demands real work."

Mr. Seamans cited a conception of Yale which few people have when he stated that a recent report shows nearly fifty per cent of its students working for at least part of their expenses.

In speaking of the college which gave the greatest return for time spent in study, Mr. Seamans stated that Chicago and Columbia universities have the most seriously engaged students in respect to their work, and receive the greatest return for their effort.

Among the reasons advanced by Mr. Seamans for the various degrees of concentration are the geographic setting of the schools, outside attractions, and faculty standards.

President Hoover Has 'Life of Riley' Not Cleveland, Dr. Martin Announces

"The recent fire in the White House has drawn much attention to the President's living quarters and the subsequent investigations have shown that the modern executive of the United States leads a luxurious and pampered life compared to Cleveland or Jackson," declared Dr. Asa E. Martin of the history department in an interview yesterday.

"In this age the inhabitants of the White House lead the life of 'Riley' compared to Cleveland and his lady," Dr. Martin said. "The President has scores of personal attendants, dozens of secret police, two private secretaries, many maids, and a goodly number of culinary experts."

"Forty-five years ago Cleveland answered the telephone himself, at all hours of the night, and many times, when the grocers called received abuses meant for Williams the steward," the history authority stated. "There was no stenographer in the executive mansion in that day and at the end of the business sessions, Cleveland answered the door and made himself generally useful. Such was his keen sense of humor that he enjoyed this plain life immensely."

"Williams, however, looked after the President in an efficient manner,"

Martin declared. "One evening the only guests at the White House were a young married couple and when the executive was ready to do his dinner jacket he found it to be worn and shabby. When the steward was consulted he explained that the shabby suit was plenty good enough for this small occasion."

"This incident in Cleveland's life brings to mind," the department head reminisced, "the story of how one summer evening the President found himself sweltering in a winter overcoat which for economic reasons Williams induced him to wear. I am sure that Cleveland thought the steward the most economical man he had ever known."

"President Cleveland was a plain man and could not orient himself to the splendor of either the White House or the cooking of its chefs," said Dr. Martin. "On one occasion when a sumptuous meal was spread before him the odor of 'bon boeuf' came au cabau, the President's French for corn beef and cabbage, reached the dining room and Cleveland ordered an exchange of dinners and left the table declaring he had eaten the most delicious meal in many months," Dr. Martin declared.

2 BACTERIOLOGY PROFESSORS INSPECT WESTERN COLLEGES

To obtain new ideas for the bacteriology department of the proposed new dairy industry building, Prof. Martin H. Knutsen and Ralph R. Tittler, of the dairy husbandry department, made a trip through the west on an inspection tour of the colleges having dairy husbandry schools, last week.

Professor Knutsen visited Purdue University, University of Illinois, University of Chicago and the Armour and company laboratories at Chicago. He also went to the Iowa State College where the annual meeting of the Society of American Bacteriologists was held from December 30 to January 1.

Professor Tittler visited Michigan State College and the University of Michigan, looking over their laboratories and other departments. He also attended the meeting at Iowa State College.

INDUSTRY LEADERS FORM MINERAL ADVISORY BOARD

An advisory board to the School of Mineral Industries, composed of mine leaders from central Pennsylvania, was organized during a recent conference in Johnstown. The group has as its aim the promotion of cooperation between the industrial world and college.

Mr. T. R. Johns, of Johnstown, general manager of the Bethlehem Mines corporation, was made chairman of the central advisory board, and Mr. M. C. Angloch, of Pittsburgh, president of the Vesta Coal company, was elected chairman of the western Pennsylvania group.
