PENN STATE HONOR CODE

A good name is cained by pair play, square dealing and good sportsmanship in the classroom, or the alklith pld and in all after college rela-tions. We cannestly desire that this spirit may become a tradition of Penn State.

POOR SPORTMANSHIP

"Booing" visiting basketball teams and the of-ficials meaniably is taboo at Penn State. Oi, at least it was taboo prior to this year But apparently there is a change of sentiment, judging from the unsportamina-like anties that have maried the court gaires in Recrea-tion Hall this winter. The conduct of the spectators at the Western Maryland game last week was deplo-able but, beheving that this condition would be curbed by action of the thinking students in the stands, no mention was made of it mention was made of it

Notwithstanding the adverse criticism that the practice evoked in certain quarters, there was no marked improvement shown at the Camegie Tech game. As a matter of fact, one cheerlender was initiated to the point of addressing a motest to the "Letter Box" of this paper. Coaches, managers, and players were likewise vehement in their denunciation of this unpaidonable breach of Penn State's Honor Code. These com and broken of Penn State's Honor Code. These com-plaints to the contrary, we are reluctant to believe that the practice has come to stay If the thinking majority in the stands fails to "smoke out" the offenders prompt-ly, however, policing of Recreation Hall by responsible undergraduates is suggested as a last resort.

Announcement that the Penn State chapter of the American Association of University Professors the American Association of University Professors would conduct a thorough investigation of the unlimited cut plan is definite assurance that the proposition is being seriously considered by responsible authorities of the College faculty. Consultation of Administration, faculty, and student opinion by the investigating committee should make its findings the determining factor in the College's official attitude toward the proposal.

REVELRY IS KING

It is unusual for us to anticipate a night of revel-13, but we would be unfain to our readers if we did not with a the charge today as we patiently await the hour that will open wide the portals to the Sonior Ball, Penn State's first and supposedly most digmfied winter so-call function. Our enthusiasm, be it known, is not unwritanted. The Senior Ball tenight undoubtedly claims decided advantages over other social events this winter Jean Goldhette's orchestra alone stands out like a beacon light in the fogr-idden sky. More important, perhaps, it is a pleasant retreat from the orrushing semester exams. And finally, we contemplate with unbounded pleasure the privilege of returning once again to the seeno of former College dances—a move intended, in scene of tormer College dances—a move intended, no doubt, to revive treasured memories of yestervent.

AS ONE STUDENT TO ANOTHER

Constant bickering over grades, to us, is an irri-Constant buckering over grades, to us, is an irri-tating by-product of the entire system of grading in American colleges and universities. Citing our own system, there are three types of students who protest if they are given a zero or a one when they believe that they deserve either a two or a three. The one student needs homo points, the second-named is jealous of a co-student, and the other is seeking scholastic distinction.

student, and the other is seeking scholastic distinction. Of these the honor point seeker is usually the masticst, as well as the least deserving. The realous student, while as nasty as the first, is likely to be deserving of a better grade. With one exception, the last type is justified in his or her claims. That is, of course, if is can be proved that the student is can next in his quest of knowledge. On the other hand, the scholarshipholder is not likely to measure up to these requirements. The reason is that the student may be insistent upon high grades for the purpose of maintaining or regaring a scholarship of one soft or another, but really is not eager to gain knowledge.

Exception, to these three are numerous, no is not eager to gain knowledge.

Exception, to these three are numerous, no doubt By the same token, there may be different classes possible under each of these types. Notwithstanding those possibilities, this tire is one that we have been in contact with and, without exception, we hold no brief for any of them. Perhaps we would shift our allegrance if we were to gain recognition in one of the types named, but it is more likely that we would swallow hard not stond turn.

THE LION'S DEN

It's a pity that mules can't wear campus hats on rainy days, for all animals like them enjoy keeping at least one ear dry.

And that I would know you no better for this, you will forgive me, my dear for acting as I do?

If my first impressions of you brought visions of arbutus peeping through last summer's dead leaves, If you reminded me of a spring saurise with a faint south wind affring through budding trees.

If you made me remember a summer night spent in a field of claves blooms admiring the stars.

And that I would know you no better for this, you will forgive me, my dear, for acting as I do?

If I loved you as a thing of heath; and wished to preserve you in any memory as a treasure over who I might alout unceasingly and alone, If I thought that in exchange for a few feeling hours of happinness, I mucht lose this joy of an eternity forever.

If I thought that to know you better might make ne love you less.

And IF Daniel were to make anything like a lengthy discourse on nules and their kindied, he would say that the agove is indeed quite asinine.

above light (like hot air) verse is not to encourage more contributions to the Den, for the latest plea produced such an orgy as has never been known in Daniel's short life, and he is now suffering from literary indigestion.

John W. EDWARD R. SHANE jr '31—Liberal Arts

"I certainly am in favor of mereasing fees so as to permit free hospital for the semester than to pay a hospital bill later in the term. It is, at present, too Lig a load to place on one man in case of illness I think that would benefit all if the expensive were divided up more evenly"
