buildings and general expansion program. "Any senior that does not join in and help in making this event a success does not deserve to be called a Penn State man," explained the leader.

Miss Buckwalter, in backing the movement declares "The student parade is going to mean a great deal to Penn State women. It is the first time in seventy-five years that they have the opportunity to show in a body what an important factor they are on the campus. It is vital that every one of the 700 girls parade in order to show the spectators that the woman student body is not made up of a handful of girls as is the usual misconception."

In a statement to the junior class Lewis asks the student body to show the Legislature that Penn State students appreciate the State's part in helping the College.

"It is of paramount importance to the student body as a whole and to the junior class in particular to turn out in a body for this parade. Fellow juniors, let us make this occasion a real success!"

Huston, sophomore leader calls upon the underclassmen to turn out en masse and fall in line for the demonstration.

"We are now approaching a critical period in the building of a greater Penn State. The College has grown by leaps and bounds during the past few years. In order to prove to several thousand visitors that we now hold a prominent place as an educational institution I urge every student to be in line. The sophomores and freshmen must turn out Friday morning," he announced.

Education by Mail Proves Profitable, Survey Discloses

Don't come to college; stay at home for it is more profitable to be educated by correspondence, say 431 out of 520 students questioned in a preliminary investigation, reported Dr. Charles C. Peters, director of educational research, yesterday.

Sendings questionnaires to students taking College correspondence courses, the educational research department finds that over four-fifths of the first 500 students questioned believe that correspondence courses are more profitable than campus courses which they have taken.

This questionnaire was part of the investigation of a committee of the state department of education appointed to determine the value of correspondence courses.

Examinations given to students taking the same courses both on campus and by correspondence indicated more advancement by the pupils of the postage stamp instructors than by students on the campus. These investigations will continue over a number of years, according to Dr. Peters.

233 TAKE GRADUATE WORK

600 STUDENTS ENROLL IN EXTENSION SCHOOLS

Engineering Department To Sponsor Branch Classes in 5 Cities

Nearly six hundred students have enrolled in the five branch schools sponsored by the engineering extension department. The schools, which began classes last week, offer three-year courses in practical engineering and are under the direction of Mr. Irving C. Boerling.

The school at Allentown leads in enrollment with 150. The Reading and Scranton schools each have 120 students, while those at Wilkes-Barre and Erie have 100 and 90 respectively.

A course in textiles has been introduced at the Reading school and about fifty students have chosen to pursue this subject. The Wilkes-Barre and Allentown schools are offering courses in aeronautics. This is the first time that such courses have been given through the extension department.
