Dr. Fred Lewis Pattee, emeritus professor of American literature, will conclude his annual lecture series at 4:15 o'clock this afternoon with a criticism entitled "The New Generation" in the little theatre, Old Main.

The series, which opened Monday, has been built around his defense of Sinclair Lewis as Nobel prize winner. In his talk yesterday, Dr. Pattee emphasized the harmful influence of modern industry on poetry. The epic and narrative have almost disappeared, he said, while the lyric form has steadily gained in popularity. This is not an age of high poetic attainments, the emeritus professor stated.

While discussing "The Newspaper Column as a New Literary Evolution," Wednesday, Dr. Pattee pointed out the influence journalisms has exerted on present-day literature. Although former newspapermen have contributed of many worthwhile qualities, they have at the same time led to a loss of literary individuality, he said.
