JUSTIFIED ACTION

Last year an announcement that the College would levy a charge for the use of the golf course evoked a wail from many students and a storm of discussion among those accustomed to free use of the links.

This action on the part of the College was not a radical one as many have claimed, nor was it the result of a sudden decision. Before the present fee was levied there was in existence a rule which authorized a green's fee of $2 for the summer months.

Justification for the tax can be found upon investigating the cost for the maintenance of the golf course. It was estimated last year that more than $14,000 was spent annually for such maintenance.

During the summer months, because of heavy traffic on the links, the greatest portion of the expenses for keeping the links in good shape is entailed.

It is the regular students who are loudest in their protestations against the summer fee. They insist that the student athletic fee paid during the year should entitle them to all-year use of the course.

SELF-SELECTION

Registrar Hoffman's disclosure that Penn State classes conducted their own selections in seeking entrance here is significant. A college conducted primarily to serve the State cannot set up rigid entrance requirements unless its applicants are of high caliber.

Summer Session Sallies

We were up at the college tennis-courts the other day, and while we were waiting for a vacant court, a couple of French Institututors grabbed the court next to us. After battling the balls about for a minute or two, one of les belles dames francaises said, "Well, shall we play in French or English?"

Maybe you've noticed the boulder beside the walk opposite the Main Engineering Building. It had a bronze tablet on it, and the tablet reads: "The Old Willow," and goes on to tell how the old willow was presented by the class of something-or-other, way back when.

Being as this is our first summer school, we were all surprised at the way these school teachers conduct themselves when they get away from home and the local school-board.

Up until yesterday we were under the impression that when a person started being a school-teacher, they began at the first grade and worked up until they were teaching high school.

We once knew a female school-teacher (A remarkably sensible teacher) Who claimed swimming pools In public schools Were a highly desirable feature

Did you read in this issue about the freak egg which one of the local hens produced? Anyway, it seems that it was the pullet's first attempt, and when the egg was broken to and behold there was another egg inside, complete with shell, yolk, and what-not.

DR. PIKE STARTS PSYCHOLOGY TALKS

Psychiatrist Will Give Second Lecture Monday--Returns For Tenth Year

"Abnormalities of Personality" will be the topic of the second lecture to be given by Dr. Horace V. Pike, clinical psychiatrist at Danville State hospital, at Schuab auditorium at 8 o'clock Monday night.

Beginning his tenth series of talks at the College, Dr. Pike discussed "The Unconscious Mind" Monday night. His lectures to students at colleges, universities, and state teachers' colleges in Pennsylvania are presented annually.

Planned by Dr. J. Allen Jackson, superintendent of the Danville hospital to disclose the social problem caused by the prevalence of mental disorders, the lectures are aimed to instruct those who are best fitted to aid in furthering principles of mental hygiene.

In his first talk, Dr. Pike pointed out the difference in the study of psychology and physiology, and emphasized the inseparability of the mind and body of man.

"We Cannot Forget" "You are not the product of your father and mother, or grandfather and grandmother," he said, "but the result of development in the mind of man for 700,000 years."

"During that entire period the same fundamental desires, our instincts, have persisted. As civilization has grown, adjustments have become more complex, and our unconscious mind has become more and more the seat of repressions."

We never forget anything, Dr. Pike said. What we think we forget is merely repressed into the unconscious mind. A chance association fifteen or twenty years from now may recall something of the present moment.

"This great crowded unconscious mind of ours is a factor in the development of mental disorders," the psychiatrist said. "The disorders may arise from repressions or from these constantly stinging instincts."

Sublimation of these adversities is the road to ease of mind, Dr. Pike said. "Despite Dr. Freud's beliefs, but all mental disorders arise from sex repression, we find that one of the cases that come to Danville is caused by syphilis, which is the result of sex repression rather than sex repression."

DENGLER DEPICTS EURIPEDES IN TALK

ing at 3 o'clock tomorrow afternoon. The series of lectures on drama is conducted annually. The third speaker on the program will be Prof. David D. Mason, of the French department, who will deal with "Francis de Curel's 'The New Idol'" July 17.

Prof. George Wulf of the department of German, will talk on "Kleist's 'Der zerbrochene Krug'" on July 21, and Prof. Carl W. Hasek, of the department of social sciences, will lecture on "Ibsen as a Dramatist" July 31. Prof. Arthur C. Cloetmich, director of dramatics at Penn State, will discuss "Contemporary Tendencies in English Drama" August 5, in the closing address.

In showing the close contacts that the present generation of drama has with Euripides and his work, Dr. Dengler explained the background in which Euripides wrote. Its similarities to the civilization of today were striking.

"The intellectuals, and people as a whole, were asking the 'Why?' for all things, very much as is being done today," he said. "Euripides reflects this mood, so that psychologically he is the father of our drama."

Historically, too, the Greek dramatist proved a strong influence in present drama. The renaissance turned to French drama, which had gone before to Seneca and the Romans, who followed Euripides.
