

Must Keep R.O.T.C. Here, Hetzel Says

vital state, national, and world problems, and consequently more and more the means of thoughtful and public spirited men and women. This would necessitate the investment of millions of dollars for proper buildings, he stated.

The use of over five and one-half millions of dollars in the past five years on buildings has made it possible to see the physical beginning of "the great Penn State," Dr. Hetzel said, noting, however, that between eight and ten times as much is necessary, to provide an adequate plant for even the present demands placed on the College.

Inadequate funds have made it necessary to restrict and select the student body. "Despite the weakness characteristic of every selective system, there has been gained at Penn State through selective processes the highest qualified group of young people assembled on the campus of any state institution, and a group comparable in preparation to that of the best endowed institutions," Dr. Hetzel said.

"Consequently, the standard of work in this College is higher than that of its sister State institutions; academic conviction is much lower," the president added. He was certain that the next decade will see a definite movement in the same direction on the part of public colleges and universities of the country.

Highest praise for the manner in which the student body, on its own initiative, had abolished harmful, vicious customs that had long been in force here was voiced by Dr. Hetzel. "There was no mandate issued against these practices, there was only the conviction on the part of clean minded, intelligent loyal young men of high moral courage that these things should no longer be," he said.

President Hetzel closed his speech with a vigorous declaration of his faith in the student body, saying "this group through its capable leadership assumes the responsibility for guaranteeing that there shall not exist viciousness or harmful and destructive activity and I have the faith to leave this burden upon the student shoulders."
