Waltonians Seek Dentzons of Deep As 1932 Trout Season Opens Today

Student and professional anglers, both ardent followers of old Isaak Walton, will line the banks of nearby streams, seeking the speckled dentzons of the deep, when trout season officially opens today.

Sailors and golfers may pray for "red at night," but the true fisherman hopes for "red in the morning." A murky sky and a slightly muddy stream are the delight of the angler who would wrest the long unmoled trout from his hole.

Gray hours of the morning will see numerous enthusiastic Waltonians issuing forth to the call of the rod and reel. Flies may be the bait used by the more experienced anglers, but the humble earthworm will still dangle on the end of many more amateur hooks.

Spring creek, near the College hog-farm, will probably be among the most popular angling places tomorrow, if past experience may be relied upon. Previous catches there indicate that it is one of the best trout streams in the State.

Other adjacent rivulets, near Oak Hill, Boalsburg, and Lemont are also likely to claim their share of devotees to the sport. And woe to the unhappy mortal who forgets either his fishing license or his pipe!

Ever since that jolly old ironmonger and fish lover, Isaak Walton, published his masterpiece, The Compleat Angler, in 1653, fishing has been the favorite sport of many. Today, lovers of the pastime glean their information from the numerous "outdoor" magazines which have been devoting their pages to trout fishing for the past several weeks.

WOMEN DEBATERS TO MEET UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

With both Penn State teams victorious in debates with Ursinus women's teams this week, a co-ed debating pair, composed of Sarah A. Ferree '33 and Marie G. Mahoney '34, will argue the negative side of the state socialism-capitalism question with a University of Pittsburgh women's team at Pittsburgh tonight.

Although their final debate at home will be held May 5 with the Seth Low Junior College of Columbia University, a women's team composed of Virginia I. Dunmire '34 and Gertrude Tulin '34 will present the negative side of the state socialism question in a contest with Skidmore College at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
