Through A Graduate's Eyes

Little is changed . . .
The same railbirds on Co-op
With whom you chat in passing, saying
"My God, old man
Aie you never going to get out of this place?"
"I'm—er—after my Master's," they say,
To which you add the mental note
"Oh, yeah?" Railbirds . . .
The nightly troops of clucking heels
Up Allen Street;
One, two—One, two—
At ten P. M.
Palmer Method swings,
Uncertain patterns of hip control . . .
And yet, on the green,
New Main that leaves one cold,
A foster mother with the habiliments of an archduke;
Grads nurtured deep at the breast of the Old
Looking on—and over—
Silent and unseeing . . . New Main,
Wife to the Administration!
Hot-cha!
The School of Liberal Arts in its adequate buildings
(The Babbitian gentry).
And the Engineers with a nice new building . . .
(More Babbits).
The School of Education
In the old Beta bedrooms.
Palatial centers for the Big Business
Of public instruction.
But then, one supposes
The tradition of the inadequate fittings of Ichabod
Must be maintained . . .
And men, in the library's musty recesses,
Men, hulking, furrowed, kindly-eyed,
Men who could with gusto
Roar cheerful morning greetings
Down west gangways even aspire to be
Mucker bosses in rock tunnels
Slaving quiescently among the stacks
For the doctorate
In pedagogy.
Self-conscious pedagogues who've sacrificed
Their very souls on the altars of conformity
To the village board of temperance and morals,
Still holding out
For one-half of one per cent.
Any objections? The chair hears none.
Thus it goes . . .
Little is changed? I suppose
I'm just a wee bit sorry
I returned . . .
