Between the Lions with The Sports Editor

This may be September 15 to most people, the beginning of another social season to the New York "deb," or just another day to the boys at Rockview, but to every sports-minded Penn Stater it means the opening of another football season-that period of the year when the eyes of every sports fan are focused on hundreds of college gridirons. There's a new gleam in the eyes of the alumni these days and new hope in their hearts. They may "remember November," but September means a new chance for their favorite eleven to "go to town." And so, they never lose hope that from the fifty or sixty boys sweating in the early September sun there will emerge a team that will take its place unashamedly with the great elevens of the past.

All of which brings us to the tale of Bob Higgins and those fiftyodd candidates going through their paces on New Beaver Field. Fifty candidates don't seem like many compared to Harvard's 125 or Notre Dame's 160, but the significant point is that nearly every man counted upon for this year's squad came back. 'And every man came back full of enthusiasm and spirit for another season and another opportunity to give Penn State a winning combination, although the schedule calls for tilts with such bone-bruising opponents as Colgate, Temple, and Harvard. And though it's no easy task to build a team from last year's wreckage Bob Higgins and his aides are imbued with the same inspiration to "go places" before that game at Temple November 12 brings this short season

Looking at things objectively, the aspect is anything but rosy. Although Flood, Rose, and some other sophomore candidates contribute reassuring poundage, the team, as a whole, is still a "lightweight" eleven. Graduation and ineligibility have taken a heavy toll of the backfield men, particularly. On the other hand, our main opponents are heavy, experienced teams; two of them, at least, Harvard and Colgate, ranked with the East's best in last year's campaign. Yet, we can't help but feel optimistic about this year's Lion eleven. We still believe last year's team didn't reach its best form until that post-season contest with Lehigh. And there's every reason to hope that the returning veterans will quickly regain the condition that enabled them to run roughshod over the be-

Lebanon Valley

Coach Hooks Mylin is finding his greatest trouble in rebuilding his forward wall, which was severely depleted by graduation. Feeser and Light, ball-toting veterans, should just about solve backfield worries.

Waynesburg

Although most of last year's strong Yellowjacket eleven is back to the wars for this campaign, Coach Frank Wolf has plenty to worry about, as the new freshman material, product of the new non-scholarship era, will have difficulty in stopping up the gaps.

Harvard

Following a two-day coaching conference, the Crimson was ready to begin active drill among its 125 gridiron aspirants today. Head Conch Eddie Casey would probably trade a hundred of this number, however, if he could have Barry Wood back.

Syracuse

With a squad similar in size to that of the Lions, Coach Vic Hanson has gone about the task of rebuilding for a difficult 1932 campaign. Tiger Joe Moran's line-smashing will again be a help in the backfield. Sewanee

Sewance promises to be the year's mystery team on the Lion schedule. Little is known about the eleven from the South except that their captain suffered an injury this summer which will keep him off the gridiron for this season, at least.

Temple

Forty Owl gridmen have been practicing for the last week and are already showing mid-season form. This year's Cherry and White eleven is likely to be even heavier than last year's A good forward-passing attack makes it doubly formidable to its opponents.

This and That

Just to prove that all 1932 graduates do not come back to hang around the Corner, Al Lewis went out and grabbed himself a job as boxing coach at W. & J. . . . And Judy Lasich is back as assistant coach of our own freshman gridders After lasting exactly one day on a job on the County road, so the rumor goes Freddy Brand is showing the way in the National Amateur open golf tourney at Baltimore . . . Some of the boys are already planning excursions to the Harvard came . . . "Spike" Leslie, new basketball coach, hurls a mean forward pass And speaking of basketball, Bub Davis is in town for a fev days Hinkey Haines liked Scranton so well, after playing baseball there all summer, that he's staying on to organize a professional eleven Danny Musser and Sol Saltzman also played in the New York-Pennsylvania league during the season just past Moon McMillen is listed in the new crop of benedicts Temple will be celebrating Alumni Day when the Lions play there November 12 And have you heard the story of what happened when the Moon-ey went over the mountain?

Ends Experienced

With four experienced ends in the fold, the Nittany coach is probably least concerned with the wings.
