75 Penn State Alumni Enrolled for First Semester Graduate Work Here

Present economic conditions and the Penn State environment were given as the main reasons for the large number of Penn State graduates taking work in the Graduate School this fall, by Dr. Carl E. Marquardt, College Examiner. Seventy-five graduates, fifty-one of whom received their diplomas in June, are working for advanced degrees during the 1932-33 session.

"At no time, however," Dr. Marquardt pointed out, "have Penn State graduates ever been in a majority during the year. Usually about one-third of the students in the Graduate school are Penn State graduates, although the proportion is slightly higher this year," he added.

Penn State graduate students majoring in education numbered twenty-five for the summer and fall sessions, while ten have enrolled in agricultural education. Graduate students in history, home economics, and mechanical engineering numbered seven in each curriculum. Fifty-three other Penn State graduates were enrolled in the 1932 Summer Session, bringing the total to 128 for the summer and fall. Of this number eighty-three have received or are working for the degree of master of science, twenty-five, master of arts, eighteen, master of education, and one doctor of philosophy.

For the Summer Session and this semester, six graduates are enrolled in electrical engineering, and five each in chemistry, economics, and industrial education. Those taking advanced work in architecture, architectural engineering, and English number four each.

In addition to the fifty-one last year's graduates who are enrolled in the Graduate school this fall, there are also eight from the class of '30, five each from the classes of '31 and '29, two from the class of '25, and one each from the classes of '27, '26, '24 and '21.

Echoes of Russia Recalled by Choir Singing Vespers

Echoes of 994 A. D., the year Russia was converted to Christianity, were heard in the Episcopal church Sunday night when a choir of forty voices sang the Russian vespers services in old Slavonic for the first time in State College.

The Russian service is entirely unaccompanied by any musical instrument. It consists principally of solemn intonations answered antiphonally by the choir through a lengthy series of modulations and changes. At no time during the service is any reference made to a text or musical manuscript.

Inspired by the spell of fine traditions, the choir, which was composed of people of the Russian Orthodox faith, sang the service in Slavonic, the former language of Russia.
