DOUBTFUL HONORARIES

The belief of a surveyed group of prominent alumni that keys dangling from watch chains may be, and in many cases are, an index of anything except all the ideals for which they stand only serves to take a little more wind from the sails of many so-called honoraries which have been undergoing no end of criticism from student and faculty sources.

Efforts have been made repeatedly to make the numerous honorary organizations as an entire group justify their existence by at least serving members who are elected and if possible the entire student body. That much rehabilitation work remains to be done is evident. The obstacle to progress along this line lies in the fact that there is no arbiter for determining the value of honoraries or for taking steps to eliminate the useless ones. It is true that the Honor Society Council, by scholastic and other standards of admission, maintains the level of scholastic attainment in many of the honoraries. The work of the honorary should not stop, however, with the recognition of scholastic proficiency. It should continue so that the members, through personal contact with the group and with prominent guest speakers may be aided in further developing.

The students who are to become the future members of honoraries control the fate of the worthless honorary. If they are to consider the attainment of a key as the sole return for the money that they will spend for an organization, things unfortunately will go on much the same. If, however, more than the exterior sign is sought for, if students, weighing the value to be received, make their decision on that basis the worthless societies will be forced out of existence by the difficulty met in getting members. Some students will grab a key no matter what the conditions may be and how much respect the organization which it represents may command. Others, with a little more thought than that exhibited by the student generations before them, can reasonably decline membership in groups which they consider of no value. By their action they not only can spare themselves regrets in the future but can also administer the most effective test to the score of existing honoraries.

The compilation of figures on the educational antecedents of the members of the faculty is enlightening because it summarizes what may seldom if ever be called to the attention of the students. The breadth of view that must be represented in a group with so many and such varied contacts serves to increase confidence of the students in the ability of the men under whom they are studying. The recent exchange of a member of this faculty with one from another college for a semester seems a policy that might well be extended. A change, bringing with it new and fresh contacts, in addition to inspirational values is one of the best tonics for minds that can too easily become sluggish from the same environment.

STUDENT AID

Student organizations have been striving doubly hard this year in their sponsorship of loan fund projects so that needy students might remain in college. Support of these projects is the only way in which students contribute to the fund. Accordingly, a final program for the year, planned to supplement an already depleted loan treasury, merits the cooperation of the entire undergraduate body.

With the organization of the loan fund here in recent years an opportunity was afforded students who found themselves in financial straits to secure assistance in continuing their quest for an education. In the period of its history the loan fund has received the support of the student body, parents, alumni, and others interested in the welfare of needy students. The result has been that approximately twelve thousand dollars has been loaned to needy students. Two hundred upperclassmen, receiving loans of fifty and seventy-five dollars, have demonstrated that they were worthy of financial assistance in that they secured a scholastic average of 1.8. Last year, with all the hardships experienced, the fund was only sufficient to aid half the number of students benefitted the year before. Unless support for the coming program is widespread another large decrease will be noted next year because of the ever increasing number of applications for loans.

Recognizing fully this period of financial stringency, the committee in charge of the student projects for the fund has maintained a policy that does not include direct solicitation. If parents, because of existing conditions, find it impossible to build up the Parents' association fund to its former proportions, an increase must come in student aid. Whole-hearted support of future benefit projects is the only means by which these demands can be answered.

BY HIMSELF The papers recently passed over with little emotion a news item that marks the end of an era, the destruction of a tradition held sacred since the first horseless carriage was used for commercial transportation. We refer to the action of the Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association in promulgating a new and revolutionary code, among whose Chesterfieldian provisions is "imposing upon the driver the necessity of meekly accepting any criticism from operators of passenger vehicles and insisting that such reprinands be topped with a courteous apology by the truck driver, even when he is admittedly in the right." The apparent indifference of the press affected us deeply-so deeply, in fact, that we were inspired thereby to the following monumental effort: "Courtesy, Consideration, and Cooperation"

Are now the watch words of the Pennsylvania Motor Truck Association

You'll never receive words of censure From the New Truck Driver, and hence you're

We don't go in much for pediatries, or pedagogy, or whatever it is they call the study of feet, but our little verses, such as the above, are edifying to no slight degree. And remember, don't look a gift horse in the mouth-he may have halitosis.

Did the Pi Kappa Phier alarm get you out of bed too? We'have been told that all the dates got out safely, with the exception of one who sprained an ankle running down stairs. However, it is rumored that the Flame of Brotherhood, in the guise of a cigarette stub, consumed most of the ritual robes that were getting pretty old anyhow, and a moth-eaten pile of hand-me-down finals that people had been trying for years to get up enough courage to throw out. At first we thought the racket outside was the garbage man, or Chandu the Magician, but it turned out to be that rather sad bell on the chemical truck. Three cockroaches and a cricket, which had been breaking up study hour for some time, were overcome by smoke. The clamor and shouting sounded distressfully far away, there were no flames in the sky; so we officially declared the whole thing a fizzle and returned to bed.
