

SHOW TO FEATURE NOVEL STAGE SETS

Thespian Production Will Include 16 Changes of Costumes, 7 Scenery Themes

With seven complete changes of scenery, and ten changes of costumes, "Old King Cole," to be produced by the Thespians on the week-end of Interfraternity Ball, will also feature novel stage sets.

Scenic design is in charge of David H. Porterfield '24, and Kenneth L. Holderman '31. The "travelers" curtain, portraying "Old King Cole and his Fiddlers Three," is of Porterfield's design and execution. This curtain will appear between most of the scenes as the central theme of the show.

Porterfield, who has been prominent in Thespian stagecraft since his undergraduate days, has made the designs for each of the ten different costumes used. Isabel L. Rhein '34, and Jane Vial '34 are supervising the execution of all costumes.

Among the costume wardrobe will be a complete women's evening attire. A jersey skirt and blouse combination is one change, while a rainbow costume is another. All phases of costume design, such as hats, and other matched apparel, are being done by Porterfield.

A speaksy scene, done in brilliant red and silver, presents every detail of the modern saloon. A more vivid scene, said to be the most elaborate ever designed for use here, is the "Charity Ball" scene. Hotel scenes, a room and a lobby form much of the background for the production.

All production work is being done at the old "Pastime Theatre," located in the alleyway between College and Beaver avenues. This long-abandoned theatre has been refitted for the making of scenery, and will be used by Thespian craftsmen in the future.

35 MEADVILLE EXECUTIVES WILL HEAR LECTURE SERIES

Thirty-five industrial executives at Meadville are being offered a series of ten lectures and discussions by the department of engineering extension, according to Prof. J. Orvis Keller, head of the department.

The series, which deals with industrial production and current economic problems, is being given in cooperation with the Chamber of Commerce.

Penn State Faculty Members Write Books on Academic Subjects, Sports

Both sports and academic matters are subjects for books now being written by Penn State faculty members. Texts on soccer, history, and English grammar will be published soon, while books on economics and modern writing are already off the press.

"These Our Moderns," by Robert E. Galbraith, of the department of English composition, is a volume exemplifying modern trends in "smart writing." The book, which is being used in conjunction with the English composition 2 courses, was placed on sale locally last Friday.

"Laissez Faire and After," by Dr. O. Fred Boucke, of the department of economics and sociology, was published in December. The book deals with the current economic ills of the world.

Dr. James E. Gillespie, of the history and political science department, is spending a year's leave of absence in gathering material for the second volume of his European history series. Dr. Gillespie will continue at the Congressional Library in Washington, D. C., until later in the year when he will complete his research in European

6 Faculty Members In '03 Bulletin Still Remain On Campus

Father Time's ceaseless swaths have eliminated all but seven members of the faculty who moulded the destinies of the Penn State students of thirty years ago, a survey of the 1902-1903 College bulletin shows. Two are professors emeritus, while the other five are still engaged in teaching on the campus.

Dr. Fred L. Pattee, who was connected with the old School of Language and Literature, and I. Thornton Osmond, of the old School of Mathematics and Physics, are the retired members. Prof. A. Howry Espenshade, head of the English department, and Prof. John H. Frizzell, head of the department of public speaking, were listed in the 1902-1903 catalogue as members of the School of Language and Literature.

Dr. Erwin W. Runkle, College historian, is the sole survivor of the old School of History, Political Science, and Philosophy. Prof. Elton D. Walker, head of the civil engineering department, and Prof. Thomas I. Maiss, of the agricultural correspondence department, are the only others to remain during the thirty year period.

centers of historical material. Besides numerous special articles written for publication in magazines, Dr. Gillespie has written two history textbooks, "The Influence of Overseas Expansion on England to 1700" and "Modern Europe to 1815." The latter book is used in conjunction with the History 18 course.

H. B. Young, of the English composition department, is compiling a book on business letter writing which will be published in the near future. He has selected illustrative material for the text from a collection of 21,000 specimens which have actually been used in business correspondence.

Sports are represented in a book on soccer by Coach William Jeffrey, to be published soon. The book deals with the history and technical points of the game and is an attempt to popularize the sport to a greater extent.

Revision of three texts now used by the College is also in progress. Prof. A. Howry Espenshade, head of the English composition department, and Prof. Thomas J. Gates, of the same department, are collaborating on revising Professor Espenshade's book, "Composition and Rhetoric." Dr. Asa E. Martin, of the history department, is also revising his book, "A History of the United States."

Prof. Harry B. Northrup, director of the Mineral Industries extension school, is revising the textbook, "Petroleum and Natural Gas," which is used in connection with the elementary instruction in the petroleum and natural gas extension schools.

The text, which will be issued in the revised form early in March, will be used in the eight additional extension centers next year. Rex W. Woods '30, is assisting Professor Northrup in writing the textbook.

700 JUNIOR SCIENCE CLUBS JOIN NATIONAL ORGANIZATION

Over 700 local science clubs in high schools and elementary colleges in the United States and Canada joined the Student Science Clubs of America, a national organization inaugurated at a meeting of club advisers in New York City last Wednesday, according to Dr. Pauline Beery Mack, editor of the Chemistry Leaflet, science publication which formerly sponsored the clubs.

Science clubs were organized independently over ten years ago and have been sponsored as local units by the Leaflet during the past six years.
