

BANKS RETURN TO NORMAL BUSINESS

Deposits Exceed Withdrawals On Day of Opening—Scrip Redemption Begins

Banks in State College were resuming normal banking functions Wednesday morning. One bank had already received the license enabling it to conduct all regular transactions and the other establishment expects to resume usual business today or tomorrow.

In the first day of unrestricted business, deposits totaled more than the withdrawals. Officials were pleased with the gain in deposits, stating that it was an evidence that the public had not lost faith in the dependability of the banking system.

Scrip Recalled

Over a third of the total amount of scrip which was issued in State College had already been redeemed by Wednesday night. The temporary medium of exchange, which was issued last Friday when the banks opened for a restricted amount of business, is now being replaced in cash or being converted into deposits.

Over ninety-nine percent of the scrip is expected to be cashed by the end of this week. However, officials said that the scrip should be presented at the banks within a reasonable time, as it will not be valid indefinitely.

The only restriction which the banks are now working under is the Federal Reserve ruling which prohibits withdrawals for purposes of hoarding. Detailed instructions in this line have not as yet been received by the local officials.

Blanshard Notes Reaction Against Fraternities, Emphasis on Football

"Distinct reactions against fraternities and the over-emphasis of football are now the outstanding trends on American college campuses," Dr. Paul Blanshard, civic reform leader of New York City, said in an interview just before his Forum lecture here Tuesday night.

LIBRARY SHOWS PRINTS, STEPS IN BOOKMAKING

Lithograph Portfolio, Series of Maps Exhibited This Week

Two concurrent exhibits, a description of steps and processes in bookmaking and a collection of Currier and Ives prints, are being displayed in Alcoe K of the College library for the rest of the month. Librarian Willard P. Lewis announced today.

The Houghton-Mifflin company, publishers, has loaned the library a series of maps showing steps in the process of bookmaking. "The Pickaninny Twins" by Lucy Fitch Perkins, a juvenile publication, was selected for this purpose, with sixteen mounted cards illustrating every step from the original manuscript to the finished volume.

A portfolio of Currier and Ives prints, presented to the College library by William B. Keeler '23, includes some of the most noted of these colored lithographs which depicted all stages of American life and industry during the nineteenth century. Many of the originals are now worth thousands of dollars because of their rarity.

BERNREUTER TO GIVE TALK

Dr. Roy G. Bernreuter, of the department of psychology, addressed a meeting of Kappa Phi Kappa at Allegheny College Wednesday.

theory of social values; instead of selecting members for their fellowship, they have chosen men on the basis of their family standing," the reform leader said.

"After all, fraternities are a handicap to the mental growth of the college student because they tend to keep a student in the same circle of friendship throughout his college career," he said. "The student should feel free to abandon friends as he outgrows them."

In his Forum lecture on "Technocracy and Socialism," Dr. Blanshard said that while technocracy suggests that technicians should direct our social order, socialism actually presents a plan of reorganization and control. "Abolition of the price system is the greatest fault of the technocrat's plan because it aims to replace currency with energy units," the speaker explained. "As men's wages would be commensurate with the actual amount of physical labor displayed, it would be almost impossible, as no nation can exist without a stable currency basis. Not even socialistic Russia can do without it."

The immediate program of socialism, according to the civic reform leader, seeks a redistribution of wealth brought about by a peaceful but democratic revision of unemployment insurance, old age pension, inheritance tax, and capital levy. It stresses collective ownership with a new structure built from the present financial system, he added.

"We want a new social order, in which the degradation of wealth is pushed off the backs of the wealthy onto the backs of the poor," he declared. "Capitalism is doomed, but we shall have to wait a number of years before a clear ethical plan of labor replaces it."

A comedy number, "Won't You Be My Valentine," written by Nevin S. Decker '33, and sung by Edwin S. Malmed '33 and Miss Johnston, comedy combination, will present a varied set-up of satire and pantomime, done in harmony and trick-rhythm.

H. Grace Baer '34, and Ralph B. Vance, juvenile leads of the show, will appear in a song and dance specialty "As Time Hurries On," written by Willard E. Fiechthorn '33. The number will offer a team-work tap interlude in front of a large chorus.

Samuel Wolfson '35, and Helen C. Whelan '34 are featured in a dance specialty, while a trio composed of Susan C. Porterfield, graduate student, Helen C. Whelan, and Charrille Merrill '34 will appear in another tap novelty.

SHOW TO FEATURE VARIED HARMONIES

Thespian Production Will Offer Comedy, Pathos, Romance, Speakeasy Melody

Mixing comedy, pathos, romance, and speakeasy life in a mortar of melody, song numbers from the Thespian show "Old King Cole" will offer harmonies both close and intermedial, according to the music emitting from rehearsals of the cast and choristers.

"It's All Ballyhoo," sung by Dorothy M. Johnston '33, will offer an expose of the routine of modern life. The number will be supported by a chorus, tapping the accompaniment to Miss Johnston's vocalization. The song was written by Frank F. Morris '31.

Prepare Specialty Numbers
Margaret S. Giffin '35, will feature "I Wonder Where He Can Be," also written and arranged by Morris. As the title suggests, the number is a plea for a definite location of a missing person, who somehow has evaded the romantic fold.

Oil Can Required Of Students in Late Seventies

"The furniture provided by the College includes stove, bedstead, mattress, table, washstand, and chair. Students will provide their own carpet, mirror, wash-bowl and pitcher, broom, lamp, and oil can."

So read one of the requirements for students' at Penn State in 1878 as outlined in the "Annual Report of the Pennsylvania State College for the Year 1877," when the College boasted a faculty of eleven members, a graduating class of three students, and a library containing 1,900 volumes.

The student body in 1877 totaled 139 members composed of one post-graduate, seven seniors, twelve juniors, sixteen sophomores, twenty-one freshmen, and seventy-nine preparatory students. There were 116 men and twenty-three women in the group.

Old Main of 1878 was "a plain, substantial structure of limestone seated on a pleasant rise of ground. It is 240 feet in length, eighty feet in average breadth, and five full stories in height, exclusive of basement, with ample lodging rooms, chapel, library, society hall, laboratories, cabinets, and armory," the report continues.

Accessibility, then as now, was a feature of the College's location. Under the heading, "Means of access," the report stated that, "A turnpike from the College gate to the end of Nittany mountains, connecting with the turnpike from Boalsburg, affords a good, continuous road to Bellefonte."

TRYON TO VISIT HERE TODAY

Professor James L. Tryon, director of admissions at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will visit the College this afternoon to confer with students who plan to enter the institute. Appointments for conferences can be made through Adrian O. Morse, executive secretary to the President.

The banks of State College hereby express their sincere appreciation of the kindly consideration manifested by the students during the Bank Holiday, which when issued caused some measure of embarrassment to very many. By your confidence and co-operation, the several institutions were materially aided in their program for coping with the situation.

With the speedy return to normal banking functions, let us hope that the inconveniences which many were called upon to face may soon be forgotten and with increasing confidence in our institutions and an abiding faith in those who have been called to leadership, face the future with the confident hope that unmeasured prosperity may be our heritage.
