DR. TWEEDY GIVES CHAPEL ADDRESS

Declares Modern Men, Women 'Hard Baked' Against All Needed Social Reforms

"Students today are so 'hard baked' with regard to the really terrible events that surround us every day that they never notice them, with the result that many things needing changed are hardly noticed even by the most interested," Dr. Henry H. Twedy, who is professor of practical theology at Yale University, pointed out in his address to the chapel audience Sunday morning.

"The student attitude is not so much a symptom of being 'hard boiled,' as it is a proof of callousness that merely grows on one. These conditions have existed since everyone's childhood, we are used to them, they have become a part of our daily life," Dr. Twedy continued.

"As an example of just how far this callousness to conditions can go, the speaker pointed to the public beheading in some parts of China. The Yale theologian showed that the inhabitants were so used to seeing the executions that they paid no attention, but went on about their business, merely passing aside to allow the beheading to go on.

"Every great power in the world today faces the almost immediate possibility of another war, yet the citizens are so hardened to the practice on the part of one nation warring on the inhabitants of another, that all that is done is the designing of another battleship, or the building of another dirigible to penetrate 'enemy lines,'" the speaker concluded.

College Officials Plan No Action To Prevent Sale of Wine, Beer

President Hetzel's Statement

WE will face at the week-end one of those significant tests which from time to time measure our individual and collective powers of self-control and self-respect. The legal aspect of the matter is at this time somewhat uncertain and confused, but the problem of conduct and the obligation relating to it which rest upon each of us and upon this community are perfectly clear. This College and this community and all individuals interested in them are the beneficiaries of generous public support based upon the belief that we are worthy of it. The College faces the coming test with complete confidence in the judgment, the good sense, the self-respect, and the loyalty of both the students of the College and the citizens of the College community.

Complete Confidence in Students Voiced by President

HETZEL CALLS WEEK-END HERE 'SIGNIFICANT TEST'

Borough Officials May Install Prohibitive Legislation If Necessary

"With complete confidence in the judgment, the good sense, the self-respect, and the loyalty of individual and townspeople, College officials will take no action to prevent the sale of legal beer and wine here after midnight Thursday night.

Although no official notification has been given that sale will not be prohibited, a statement released by President Ralph D. Hetzel yesterday made no mention of a restriction on the sale of the beverage here. Borough officials, likewise, have taken no action in the matter, so that 3.2 percent beer and wine could probably be sold here legally early Friday morning.

Local Aspect in Doubt

"We will face at the week-end one of those significant tests which from time to time measure our individual and collective powers of self-control and self-respect," the President's statement says. "The legal aspect of the matter is at this time somewhat uncertain and confused, but the problem of conduct and the obligation relating to it which rest upon each of us and upon this community are perfectly clear."

"This College and this community and all individuals in them are the beneficiaries of generous public support based upon the belief that we are worthy of it," the statement continues. "The College faces the coming test with complete confidence in the judgment, the good sense, the self-respect, and the loyalty of both the students of the College and the citizens of the College community," it concludes.

Borough Ordinance Needed

Although borough officials will probably not take any action before beer and wine become legal, Burgess Eugene H. Lederer said early last week that if the moral standards of the community were lowered the borough would pass an ordinance against the sale of 3.2 percent alcoholic beverages here.

Sale of legal liquor here cannot be prevented without an ordinance, the borough solicitor told Mr. Lederer late last week. However, he intimated that there might be developments within the next few days that would prohibit the distribution in State College as a college town.

Doubt as to whether or not an 1850 State law prohibiting the sale of ardent spirits or malt liquors within a two-mile radius of State College would become effective again was settled by Prof. Sheldon C. Tanner, of

DEANS TO RELEASE GRADES BELOW '1'

Administrative Council Formulates New Ruling—Will Include Listing of Zeros

Zero grades, in addition to the below grades, will be available at the deans' offices for the fraternity scholarship chairman this semester, according to Carl R. Ingling '33, chairman of the student committee on fraternity scholarship.

The motion providing that zero grades be included in the lists sent to the deans' offices by the faculty was passed last week by the Council of Administration, following its recommendation by Interfraternity council scholarship committee, and a committee from the Council of Administration.

Non-fraternity men will be able to secure their below and zero grades only by forming groups and selecting a representative to go to the deans' offices for them, according to the new regulation. Individuals will not be allowed to use the lists.

Whether or not the zero grades would be mailed to the students along with the below grades has not yet been determined, Ingling declared. He added that the new motion would be put into effect when the grades are sent out for the present eight weeks' period.
