LETTERS RELEASED BY MERGER GROUP

Committee Sends Explanations Of Combined Government Plan to Societies

Seeking to clarify campus opinion concerning the proposed merger of men's and women's student governments, explanatory letters were sent to all social fraternities and to a number of campus societies yesterday by members of the student merger committee headed by John A. Wood '33, senior class president.

The content of the letters, according to Wood, explains clearly the present system of student government by uncombined men's and women's groups and outlines the basis of representation on Student Board and Student Council which would prevail under the proposed system of a combined student government.

Letter Explains Finances

The letters also cite the present rules governing inter-class finances and the system used in this respect. In addition, the status of present women's class officers in case the proposed plan is adopted is explained.

"No definite response is asked of the organizations receiving the letters," Wood stated, adding that "the fundamental purpose of the plan is to prepare the students for intelligent voting on the problem when it is subjected to popular vote."

No date for an all-College poll concerning the government merger issue has been selected as yet.

Seniors To Receive Cap, Gown Refund

All seniors who have made deposits on the caps and gowns for graduation will receive a refund for the entire amount by presenting their receipts at Student Union desk tomorrow. This act has resulted because of a favorable surplus in the class treasury. The inter-class finance committee will meet tonight to sanction the move.

Although caps and gowns will be distributed free, a ten-dollar fee, payable at the time of gown acceptance, will be required as a hold check but will be returned after graduation. All seniors who have not yet ordered caps and gowns to do so today at the designated places.

Variety of Short Stories, Articles To Appear in May 'Old Main Bell'

"The last lush days of lolling about in collegiate diapers and the soft bellyband of parental subsidy must swiftly go . . . the young man wants to get his teeth into something . . . and the only thing society has left him to bite is his fingernails."

A senior is speaking, in his "New Valedictory," which appears in the May issue of the Old Main Bell, to be released today. "Taken all or in parts, the world presents a rather shabby appearance . . . He has caught it at a time when its makeup has slipped, and its costumes are badly ragged . . ." he observes. "A new valedictory? Hardly . . . an old, old valedictory."

Dr. Willard Waller, sociologist and author, writes "The Professor Looks at Students." "Students freely express their attitudes toward those prentisms of their minds which they confuse with their professors, but perhaps few undergraduates ever come to realize that professors are just people," he points out. "No where on earth is conventionalized falsehood more firmly entrenched than in the academic world; nowhere does illusion conceal reality with a heavier fog."

Speaking of "chiseling," the sociologist says, "Because of their own inner conflict about the matter, few students can chisel gracefully. Most chiseling is rather awkward because it is too self-conscious; the best chiseling is that of the responsive listener, and it is often unintentional."

A fable, "Gentlemen, The Prince," by Maynard Wood '34, Froth editor, gives a modern version of the old tale of the romance-seeking prince who slew dragons by the dozen to claim his princess. They do not live happily ever after, Wood contends. Charlotte Shachmann '35, contributes "Tight," an episode from the annals of McAlister hall's ten o'clock checking in, featuring an inebricate and her garbled account of proceedings.

"Stodgy Student Press," the leading editorial, analyzes the reasons for the ultra-conservative fourth estate hereabouts. "Briefly explained, not excited," says the editor. "Psychosis," another editorial, discusses the perennial suspicions of graft in handling student funds.

Edward A. Aff '33 contributes a short story, second prize winner in the Phi Delta Epsilon short story contest, entitled "Into My Heart's Treasury." Built around Sara Teasdale's poem, the story tells of an elusive lover; wooing a girl who works in a small bookstore.

A feature article, "Women and Campus Politics," by Mae Kaplan '34, discusses the problem of the political affiliations formed among the women students. Timed to the moment is "Institutions and People," with its discussions of those campus phenomena, final exams, and the crammer.

"Bill Pickle and Frank Buchman," the story of the "Conversion of a Sinner," as told by William M. Stegmeyer '34, presents the metamorphosis of a drinking man to his present time-honored status as "exhibit A" in the collection of a modern evangelist.
