

Students Continue Protests

To the Editor: It has been interesting to observe the reactions of Mr. Bezdek and Company to the wave of student indignation that Mr. Cartmell's "resignation" produced.

One of the first issued by Mr. Hugo stated that Cartmell had violated his contract and refused to cooperate by not teaching Physical Education classes.

Another statement issued by John A. Wood, student president, was to the effect that the whole matter was the result of careful deliberation on the part of faculty, alumni, and students.

The statement that Bezdek made to Cartmell himself was, "Nate, you're too expensive a man, that's all."

As far as that goes, according to an oral contract made with Bezdek, Cartmell is supposed to be eating at Varsity hall at the expense of the College, and also to receive a certain amount for coaching summer track.

Just a few inconsistencies. Now might we point out some facts which the situation has clarified?

The students don't want an intensive system of intramural athletics. They'll stand for, and even become mildly interested in some of it, but never at the expense of intercollegiate competition.

And there's the real reason behind all the rumpus. The students want Cartmell because he is a gentleman and because he produces results; and they'll fight to the full extent of their powers against a system which ousts such men.

If you don't believe that, Mr. Bezdek, conduct a student poll, "Intercollegiate vs. intramural athletics," and publish the results.

-W. V. K.

To the Editor: Congratulations to the COLLEGIAN for its decided stand on the Cartmell case. Such openness and sincerity is as pleasant as it is surprising in an atmosphere of tied hands, passing the bumk, and making of meaningless "statements." It has long been obvious, even to outsiders, that conditions are not what they should be in Penn State athletics. Unbridled zeal for a visionary and wholly theoretical intramural program has long caused varsity sports to suffer.

Just a point or two about the whole situation here. The COLLEGIAN mentioned but did not emphasize enough, we believe, the assurance that was made the student body when the non-subsidization program was put into effect.

What has happened is that experienced, deservedly well-paid men like Cartmell are being replaced by "Oshkosh Physical Education Institute" or "South Kansas Agricultural Training Academy" willing to work for a song and not particular what it is.

Secondly, whence comes this praise of "athletics for all?" Anyone who has been forced to attend a phys. ed. class for two years knows just how much physical benefit is obtained from these semi-weekly maneuvers.

And, seemingly, in place of the additional cooperation varsity coaches were to receive, idealistic obstacles are thrown in the face of the need for every possible aid during this period of transition.

But the student feels that the man representing the school in intercollegiate competition represents the student personally, and he loses caste when that man meets defeat. Take away the coach who develops winners and the student kicks.

intramural program when it is offered and have a right to expect an extensive and successful program of intercollegiate athletics for the athletic fees they pay.

Nate must go, the officials say, because he destroyed the morale of the physical education department. Yet, inevitably, these same officials are destroying every shred of student morale by turning out athletic teams unfit to represent Penn State among institutions of the same size and standing.

-LION OR TWO

To the Editor: May we present to the student body this question, "Is the advancement and development of intramural athletics worth the loss of intercollegiate recognition?"

Naturally there are two sides to the question. Some few students will stand steadfastly behind the Physical Education School's policy of athletics for everyone. They will point out the beneficial effects of intramural and mass athletics on the group.

Let us suppose that next year we completely abolish intercollegiate football. Let us suppose that a regular tournament is conducted among the fraternities and that Sigma Phi Epsilon wins it again.

Bezdek Supporters Take Stand

To the Editor: In my statement that appeared in Tuesday's issue of the COLLEGIAN I said that it is too bad we are losing a prominent coach in Nate Cartmell.

At the beginning of this year we had at the College a few members on the faculty in the School of Education that had been here when Penn State subsidized athletes. These men over a period of years have built up a reputation for Penn State throughout the East through their own personality and the teams that they have directed in intercollegiate competition.

Now one of these, Nate Cartmell, has resigned. To lose Nate is certain man says, "Wilson—there was a football player!" or "Lewis—there was a man I wouldn't want to meet in a ring!"

to lose a portion of the track and field prominence that he had brought to Penn State. To regain our loss may take a short time. We will again assume our present place.

It is, then, the part of every student to enter into the change, to hasten the return to normalcy. In this respect I ask that a more thorough understanding of the situation be sought for; then, earnest cooperation.

Yours very truly, WALTER C. MOSER '33, Ex-president Athletic Association

To the Editor: I wish to go on record as opposing the flood of undeserved censure heaped upon Director Hugo Bezdek in the recent Cartmell controversy. It is absurd, unwarranted and utterly ridiculous, and apologies are in order.

Contrary to general opinion, there is absolutely no personal feud between the executive and the coach, other than the natural differences of opinion arising when conflicting viewpoints, concerning the conduct of athletics, arise, as they do in this case.
