

Speaking Of Books

FOUR STORIES FOR SUMMER
"Little Man, What Now?", by Hans Fallada.

The depression in Germany has been of longer standing and more severely felt than in America. With any kind of a break Hans Fallada and his faithful wife, Bunny, would have succeeded in their marriage adventure. But the odds were all against them and we see them going down as the mills of the gods grind slowly. Bunny is a particularly interesting and human sort of individual.

"Grand Canary," by Archibald J. Cronin.

Neither as stark and sombre as "Hatters Castle" nor, it must be confessed, as well written, "Grand Canary" is a much more interesting and enjoyable story. The scenic background of the Canary Islands and the excellently developed plot and characters are in every way worthy of the author.

"Not to Eat, Not to Love," by George Weller.

College life as it is served at Harvard presents football scenes, service on the college papers, classroom instruction, interviews with the deans and other activities in America's premier university.

"Pageant," by G. B. Lancaster.
G. B. Lancaster is really Miss Edith Lyttleton and "Pageant" is a long colorful story of family life in Tasmania with many interesting pictures of another little known part of the world. The relations of the settlers with the convicts, too, furnish an unusual note.
