ground outside the building in an effort to secure adequate foundation for the permanent shoring.

As soon as permanent shoring, which will remove all possible danger to work in the holes under the building, is erected, the College will take steps to reach bedrock under the wing and build a permanent foundation. "Damage to the building is almost negligible, consisting almost entirely of cracked plaster and a few cracks in the brick covering. The fact that the building is constructed entirely of steel beams made it impossible for the foundationless part of the wing to do anything more than sag under the strain. The presence of the shorings removes even this danger.

The holes are thought to have been caused by a subterranean stream which washed the ground away. When the building was erected two years ago deep soundings were taken of the land on which the building stands and the site was pronounced entirely safe for the building.

BERKELEY VISITS COLLEGE

George A. Berkeley, vice-provost of the University of Pennsylvania, is a visitor at the College this week as the guest of Edward K. Hibshman, secretary of the Alumni association.

F. White will be graduated in the arts and letters curriculum, while Harry E. Hill, jr., Thaddeus S. Irwin, William W. McMillen, jr., John M. Torrence, William A. Wells, and John R. Warner will receive degrees in commerce and finance.

The School of Mineral Industries will award six bachelor's degrees, one in ceramics to John D. Harnish, jr., and four in metallurgy to Henry F. Hiller, jr., Samuel K. Hostetter, jr., Roger E. Snyder, and Allen G. Van Wye. A degree in petroleum and natural gas engineering will be awarded George A. Weaver.
