TRUSTEES STUDY BUILDING PROGRAM

Completion of L. A. Group, More
Women's Dormitories, New Library Among Plans

Continuation of the College building program, including the completion of the Liberal Arts unit, added women's dormitory facilities, and a new library building, is foreseen in the efforts of a committee recently appointed by the Board of Trustees of the College.

Appointed for the purpose of studying the application of federal loans to colleges of the country under the provisions of the public works building act approved by Congress last spring, the committee is expected to make its report with a short time.

To Try To Obtain Loans

Should the group be successful in obtaining a loan or a series of loans under the $3,000,000,000 public buildings construction legislation, work would be started immediately on the buildings here, administration officials have announced.

No decision has been reached concerning which building or unit will be constructed first. While strong pressure is being exerted to have a new library erected on the site of the women's building, it is thought likely that the administration will first complete the main building between the present wings of the Liberal Arts unit.

It has also been suggested that by constructing another women's dormitory, the amount borrowed from the government would be more easily repaid. It is thought that this would be the next one to be constructed.

Champlin Describes English Method Of Education in Newspaper Article

"For the most part there is no English philosophy of education and no great amount of political activity in behalf of education," Dr. Carroll D. Champlin of the School of Education believes. His opinion was voiced in a series of newspaper features entitled, "Education Around the World" which was released to the press yesterday.

Supporting the above contention, Professor Champlin states that, "Schools have been established in England as the result of a great number of forces of which the state has not been one of the foremost. Other contributing forces are the church, economic conditions, private enterprise, and philanthropic interests.

"The English Constitution is a mass of statutes representing the accumulation of the centuries, and the English school system is a conglomeration of every imaginable variety. Educational institutions have been established as the result of inspiration and experiment," Professor Champlin's article continues.

"As occasion demanded changes, and development there was a modest movement in the direction of reform, but very seldom have there been great drives and organized campaigns to transform the English schools although there have been numerous compromises and makeshift alterations to meet community exigencies and peculiar circumstances," Professor Champlin points out.

Although he criticizes English schools for their obvious lack of system with respect to their development, Professor Champlin does not think that this haphazard progress of English institutional learning has seriously harmed the development of first class secondary schools and universities.

The informality of educational progress in England has attached itself to the school itself and a certain informality has become a noteworthy characteristic of the English university, Professor Champlin points out.

Scholarship at the English schools is of a high order, according to Pro-

GIBBONS RELEASES JOURNALISM BOOK

"Making Today's Newspaper" Includes
Summary of Lectures in Newswriting Course

"Making Today's Newspaper," Prof. William F. Gibbons' latest book on elementary journalism, went on sale Saturday.

The book, which was published only ten days ago by an Ann Arbor, Mich., firm, was produced by the photo-lithography process. It is a summation of lectures given by Professor Gibbons in Journalism 13 courses, together with supplementary material.

"Making Today's Newspaper" treats journalism from the newest psychological angle and is a definite attempt to abandon the former method of teaching "trade school journalism." It also seeks to point out why particular stories are interesting, in view of the diversified appeals of the readers, according to the author.

Included in the text are some hitherto unpublished accounts of how modern news stories were covered. A full description of the methods used in covering the air-mail plane disaster near Bellefonte several years ago is also included.

Avoid Mexican Co-eds! They Always Have Chaperones After 9 O'Clock

Co-eds at the University of Mexico, the oldest advanced educational institution in North America, must be accompanied by chaperones on all dates scheduled for later than 9 o'clock at night, according to Prof. Franklin C. Banner, head of the de-

BROWN APPOINTED TO FILL VACANCY

Home Economics Extension Staff
Member Assumes Position of Miss Bogart, Deceased

Miss Margaret Brown, member of the home economics extension staff here at the College since June, 1917, has been appointed head of the home economics extension work in the state to fill the vacancy created by the death of Miss Madge T. Bogart.

Miss Brown was born in Wayne county, and after attending the East Stroudsburg State Teachers college, spent several years as a teacher in the public schools of the northeastern part of the State. She also took two years of work at Simmons college in Boston.

Before coming to Penn State, Miss Brown taught home-making in the vocational high school at Lampeter, Lancaster county. In 1922 she received the bachelor of science degree from Columbia university.

Shortly after her arrival here the staff increased. There are now fifty-three members on the staff with six located at the College in administrative and special activities, and forty-seven are working in sixty-five counties of the state.

partment of journalism, who recently returned from a two months vacation in Mexico.

"The chaperone may be a relative of either the young man or woman comprising the couple, but, in most instances, is an instructor at the school," the journalism department head explained. "Contrary to general opinion, the young Mexican girl is not 'flashy.' She neither haunts cabarets nor drinks and smokes in public," he added.

Professor Banner pointed out that at the Mexican University, which is located in Mexico City, no student tries to gain a degree. A degree may be gained as the result of attendance, but much of the education is highly informal and varied and many students attend the school for three or four years and never receive a degree of any sort.

"Pure intellectualism dominates the students at the university," Professor Banner said, adding that, "A general revealing in books along the lines of world literature and philosophy tends to supplant any 'cut and dried educational system."

Among the Mexican customs which impressed Professor Banner was the publication of the names of all the unmarried men and women on the city court house bulletin board. Additional information such as addresses and phone numbers may be obtained by requesting the same, the department head stated.

In summarizing, Professor Banner said, "Mexico is now foreign and decidedly more Spanish than Spain. There are beautiful courts and buildings. Incidentally, many of the higher class Mexicans firmly believe that America is yet too young a nation for its people to have known and developed the finer phases of life," he concluded.

On Other Campuses

West coast co-eds were given something to worry about when the State of California recently passed a law which makes the wearing of any fraternity pin by a non-member a criminal offense. What a break for first year males if pledge buttons are beyond the legal pale.

A professor of English at the University of California recently unloosed the following epigram for the edification of his students: "A mule has a right to be carefree, he has no pride of ancestry nor hope for posterity." It is rumored that the professor can trace his ancestry as far back as Lucius Apullus.

WILL HOLD POULTRY MEETING

Instructions in the brooding, selection and marketing of birds will be among the subjects opened in the poultry short course which will open here November 13, according to Dr. Dean R. Marble, of the poultry husbandry department. Opportunity will also be provided for consultation with specialists in other fields of agricultural work.
