

PINCHOT TALKS ON LIQUOR CONTROL

speech from outside the Auditorium by means of the amplifying system.

"I am a dry. I am a dry because I believe that prohibition is right," the Governor said. "I cannot change my position now just because the shoe is on the other foot. Turn about is fair play."

In accepting the apparent decision of the public, Pinchot outlined a platform which he believes will reduce to a minimum the evils of the return of liquor. They are:

1. The saloon must not come back.
2. Liquor must be kept out of politics.
3. Liquor must not be sold without restraint.
4. The iniquitous Brooks High License law, which dragged our judges into liquor politics, must not return.
5. The sale of liquor must be so handled as to discourage bootlegging by making it unprofitable.

Blames Dry Leaders

In reviewing his record as chief executive of Pennsylvania, Governor Pinchot said that at the end of his first term of office, the licensed saloon had been abolished, the alliance of crooked whiskey and crooked politics had been driven under cover, and the number of breweries had been reduced from 156 to sixty-one.

When he entered office again after four years' absence, the Governor said that he found conditions worse again. He maintained that the law enforcement power had been given to wet individuals. He also blamed the dry leaders of the country, who, he said, "laid down on the job."

"We have agreed that the will of the majority shall decide," he said. "And that decision, we have agreed, shall be binding on the minority. That is why we are a nation."

"Just as I demanded that every wet should accept the decision of the American people when they went dry," the Governor continued, "so now I must myself accept the decision of the American people when they go wet. I am a dry, but I am an American first."

Dr. Haber Snares Dangerous Spider During Field Trip

While accompanying his class on a field inspection trip recently, Dr. Vernon R. Haber, of the department of entomology, captured a venomous "black widow" rarely found in the northern part of this country.

The spider is of a species that is fatally poisonous to domestic animals, but rarely proves fatal to man. Nearly two weeks of fever, aching pains, and shortness of breath follow being bitten by the "black widow."

In proportion to its size, the "black widow" is more poisonous than the tarantula species, found on bananas, according to Dr. Haber. The spider was captured on the edge of Mitchell's woods, about a half mile north of the borough limits.

Eyes which have been active throughout a busy day are strained by studying and reading at night. Glasses relieve the strain.

Yes, I'll go to the party. I feel better now.

Isn't it exasperating to have to miss a wonderful party because of "recurring" pains? Embarrassing, too, when you can't tell friends the reason. But now, no need to flunk an exam or miss a party. When you are below par, take Kalms, quick-acting tablets developed by Johnson & Johnson especially to relieve "recurring" pains, such as headache, backache and neuralgia. One tablet is enough for most cases. Kalms are safe, do not affect digestion or heart action, and are not habit-forming. Your druggist has them in purse-size boxes of 12 tablets.

Many Trees Beautify Campus Here; European Elm Most Common Species

"I think that I shall never see a poem as lovely as a tree."

Kilmer's lines have been praised by the English department and popularized by modern music until the meaning has almost become a campus by-word. Yet few people who sing these words realize how great a variety of trees are on this campus.

Approximately eighty species of trees can be seen here and over three hundred and fifty species of shrubs are represented. The European elm leads all other species in numbers, while the Norway maple is a close second, and there are fifteen different kinds of maple trees and ten kinds of oak trees here. The American elm will be featured in the future landscape development of the College.

The willow tree, which stands by the water fountain on the front campus, has been associated with almost the entire history of the College. The original willow was planted there in 1853 by Prof. William G. Waring, who is the grandfather of Fred Waring, leader of the Waring's Pennsylvanians dance orchestra.

In 1911 the old tree was severely damaged in a storm and was removed. A grafting was made of the old tree by members of the Waring family and now the smaller tree stands in its place. The curly-leaved willow across from the South Liberal Arts building is the only tree of its kind in this section of the State.

The ginkgo tree in front of the Womans' building is referred to as a living fossil and was prominent in the Mesozoic Age, and it is the only species of the tree now existing in the world. It is found in China on the sites of old temples and holds a prominent place in the Chinese religion. This specimen is regarded by experts as being one of the best in the country.

The ash tree near the walk from Old Main to Main Engineering was sent here from Princeton University with the request that it be located on the campus for future years. It has supped leaves and is the only cup-leaved ash tree in Pennsylvania.

Many of the trees on the front have been dedicated to Penn State men who were killed in the World War. The yellow-wood tree by the walk from the Woman's building to the chemistry annex is the only one in town. It is a southern tree and is preserved because it is unusual to find it thriving so far north.

Students at Antioch recently replaced physical education with a bit of turnip picking for the benefit of the unemployed. There, that shows what happens when this newfangled intra-mural athletic idea is carried too far!

Co-eds at Wellesley have decided not to greet each other in passing more than once a day since they deem it tiresome to hallow the same simple souls time after time. They should.

We believe we have found the solution to the compulsory attendance problem. At the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, students are fined for each class cut, and the total 'take' is used to buy a Xmas present for the prey.

"What's in a name?" Plenty at Fordham. Father Deane is dean of discipline; Mr. Shouten is in charge of debating; While Mr. Voekl is in charge of the glee club.

At Denison University there is a college regulation which reads: 'The student may be reinstated only if absence is caused by long-continued illness or death.' Personally, we would like to know who wants to commute from the nether regions?
