College To Stop Idea 'Pirating'

Research Corporation Formed To Protect Public by Holding Patents

Steps have been taken at the College to protect the general public against the possible pirating of inventions and discoveries which the College intends shall be available to the people of the Commonwealth and of the nation without profit to itself, President Ralph D. Hetzel announced recently.

To achieve this protection the Pennsylvania Research Corporation has been formed. The purpose of the corporation is to hold, under agreement with the College, all patents that may be obtained by the College as a result of research projects carried on by its staff members under regulations laid down by the Council on Research of the College.

The corporation will be managed by a board of ten directors, who will serve without remuneration. Six of these were elected at a recent organization meeting. The original board includes four members of the College Board of Trustees, the dean of its engineering school, and the chairman of the research council.

With several hundred research projects continuously in progress at the College, some of which give indication of being of immediate and practical value in industry and commerce, it was felt advantageous by the College administration to centralize authority and responsibility for the management of patent rights in a separate corporation.

As a state-supported institution, the policy of the College is to apply for patents solely to protect itself against parties who might appropriate for private gain discoveries on which College scientists may have been working for many years.

The College believes that projects for which the state has supplied funds should necessarily accrue to the benefit of the citizens of the state without profit to itself.

Since the charter of the new corporation provides that any and all moneys received as royalties or licenses to the patents held by the corporation will be used to further scientific research, the intent of the College in this respect is amply provided for.

By ballot at the recent organization meeting of the Research Corporation, the following were elected officers of the corporation. Dr. Hetzel announced: President, G. H. Deike, Pittsburg, member of the College board of trustees; vice president, R. L. Sackett, of State College, dean of the School of Engineering; secretary and treasurer, R. H. Smith, of State College, Comptroller of the College.

The following are the incorporators who constitute the initial board of directors which will be augmented by the election of four additional directors at a subsequent meeting of the board: W. L. Afelder, G. H. Deike, and James Mitholland, all of Pittsburg, and all members of the College board of trustees; Henry D. Brown, of Williamsport, member of the College board of trustees; R. L. Sackett, Dean of the School of Engineering, and Dr. S. W. Fletcher, chairman of the Council on Research, both of State College.

1881 College Catalog Discloses Freshmen Regulations, Customs

The Penn State campus of 1881-82, with all its class rooms, laboratories, the library, the chapel hall, and numerous dormitories in Old Main, presented a vastly different picture than the campus of the present. A description of the College at that time is given by the College catalogue for that year.

The catalogue or calendar was a sixteen-page booklet, three by five and a quarter inches. The faculty consisted of thirteen men and two women, headed by James A. McKee, M. A., Acting President. Miss Anna M. Cooper, B. S., was "Lady Principal," while Miss Hattie I. Foster was "Instructor in Music."

In its description of the campus, the calendar says that the main building "contains the public rooms, such as chapel, library, cabinets, laboratories, class-rooms, and social halls, and a large number of dormitories." The other buildings are professors' houses, barns, engine-houses, etc.

At that time, the College provided a bedstead, mattress, washstand, and a chair for each student who roomed in Old Main. However, all other articles such as bedding, wash-bowl, pitcher, mirror, and lamps had to be furnished by the student himself.

The College provided no boarding facilities at that time, students being obliged to eat in town. However, meals were served at about half the present rates, the schedules in the bulletin show.

At that time, all students were required to take military training three times a week, but seniors and juniors had to attend only half the classes assigned to members of the two lower classes. The uniform was made of cadet gray cloth in a standard pattern.

The semester type of college year was not in force fifty years ago. The year was divided into a fall session of sixteen weeks and winter and spring sessions of twelve weeks each.

According to the catalogue, General Science was probably the most popular course, embracing German and French, mathematics and an outline of the natural and metaphysical sciences. The Classical course combined the components of an old-fashioned "college course" with a large amount of scientific knowledge and practical training.
