PEACE AT ANY PRICE

The borough authorities have once again served notice on the student body that they mean business. The most recent case is that of seven students who have paid fines amounting to $29.50 because they failed to remain a judicious distance away from the scene of a fire several weeks ago.

The borough had a legal right to impose fines on those students, for the Burgess himself declared that he could have any student arrested for disorderly conduct, even though that student were doing nothing more than leaning against a post at the Corner. And Burgess Leitzell has also declared that when he has a person arrested, that person is guilty.

The arrest of those students at the fire seems hard to justify, since the firemen did not establish a "fire line" which is the method used in other towns to keep spectators out of the way of the firemen. Instead, they waited until the crowd had gathered, and then the Burgess and his assistants attempted to push the students back. In the excitement, a line of water found its way in the general direction of the onlookers. And this wasn't the first time it had happened. Anyone would object to being treated in that manner.

The borough charges that the students refused to cooperate; that they deliberately remained in the fire zone. How many students in that group knew that there was a borough ordinance prohibiting anyone but authorized firemen from approaching within 500 feet of a fire? Was any definite attempt ever made to acquaint the student body with that fact?

Borough ordinances must be published in a newspaper at the time they are passed, but they are published in a paper whose officials have agreed not to solicit subscriptions among students. Early this year the borough inserted an advertisement in the COLLEGIAN "warning" the students that violations of the borough ordinances would be prosecuted. But no effort was made to explain those ordinances.

Regardless of how unfair the borough's attitude and methods appear to be, the students can do nothing. By objecting they are only contributing to the borough funds through fines, and to Burgess Leitzell's pocketbook through the costs. Alumni and friends who are in town this week-end should be notified of the local situation, so that they will not be caught unawares, as so many visitors have been in the past. The words "courtesy" and "reason" seem to be missing from the vocabularies of some local men, who take particular delight in playing the childish game "bully-on-the-ash-pile."

WELCOME, ALUMNI

Once more the College has the privilege of welcoming to the campus the alumni. It is with greater pride and better feeling than ever before that we do it this year. There is a different spirit about Penn State, a spirit that the alumni are bound to feel after they have been here a short time.

Penn State is very definitely on the up-grade. Probably the thing that has done more than anything else is the winning football team. Perhaps the picture has not been too bright the last few years. True, some games have been dropped to schools that might be called inferior. Those days have passed. Any team that can play as our team played last week should satisfy any alumnus, no matter how particular.

There are other points to consider. The campus has never looked better than it does today. Well-kept paths, nearly perfect lawns, and buildings brightened by renovation all add to the new feeling that is present. Even the co-ed, traditional target for unkind remarks, presents a far more intriguing appearance. An increase in enrollment points toward a healthy, steady growth.

It is unnecessary to go on. All this will be apparent to the alumni soon after they arrive. A sincere welcome awaits. May this week-end be the best ever!

CAMPUSEER

BY HIMSELF

While this department was spending his six-day week-end in New York he picked up the story of the most colossal and far-reaching hoax of the twentieth century: the inside story of Esquire's streamline department.

It seems that Count Alexis de Sakhnoffsky, the gent responsible for those drawings you see in the mag, of airplanes that will not rise off the ground, cars that no one can get into and trunks that no one could open is the owner of Esquire. He was experimenting one day with some bright crayons and tinted paper when he drew a design for a motor car much as you scrawl idly on a blotter while waiting for the operator to park her gum and connect you with Grange. One of the boys at the office, who was probably trying to chisel the Count, suggested that they run it in the mag as a joke.

The Count looked at the dummy and found he had stuff from every author in the known world but there were still a couple pages blank. He ran the drawing. The rest is history.

The first thing the Count knew the automobile manufacturers were putting out models from his designs. The next month the Count drew airplanes, then motor boats, trunks and, after he had exhausted his ingenuity and there was nothing left to make any more impractical, he gave an interview to the papers, advocating streamlined humans with designs for streamlined anatomy. Still the public swallowed it and bought Esquire by the tens of thousands.

However the Count has created a Frankenstein and it looks as though he will have to call in Dr. Seuss and Thurber to think up some screwier streamlines.

WHAT PUT RINGS UNDER MY EYES:

If there are any unfortunates who tried to find Penn Staters at two o'clock Sunday morning in New York, they will appreciate the predicament of the Froth editor who sank into a boyish sleep after the game and, waking at two, tried to find someone. He spent the night walking around skylarking at the big buildin's. Nary a soul did he see... A fun-loving group of Nittanians, as the N'Yawk papers like to call us, gathered together chez Minsky, Saturday night. The gals were heaving fundamentals in a college skit when our lads gave a deep-throated "ROAR LION, ROAR!" From all over the house came the yell as hundreds of other State lads joined in. The game: We sat behind Cliff Montgomery: he put on a fine nail chew when our club hammered through for the first score... he relaxed at last when Bronjinski made his bone-crushing run in the last quarter... That uniformed drunk in the Penn State section, who cheered like mad for us, looked very much like a Columbia campus cop... Jim Norris, Phil Moonves, Gardner Cook, and Jim Dugan did the Village... Major Thompson was put in a pretty spot by a drunk who insisted on the Major having one... Pete Barbour and another Sigma Nu embarrassed Willy Stegmeier and Villon Van Keuren by nodding off in the subway... Momser Wood never showed up to go to Florida with Steg and Van... Frizzle and party did Harlem and I can't exaggerate... We just found a piece of paper in our pocket with nine room numbers to look up Saturday night... we never got any further than the New Weston bridal suite... (See Froth for details)...

That funny drunk at the game who hovered over Higgins, trying to bet the huge wad in his hand... Merrill Morrison had a tough time, writhing in the bench with his trick leg, while the boys were in that disastrous last quarter... Phil Moonves and party were just about to get the bum's ruff from the New Yorker grill when the huge houncer and Phil recognized each other as opponents on pro grids... Drum Major Townsend got plenty of requests from feminine fans for autographs...

Student Horticulture Show Opens Tonight; Cash Prizes Offered

Visitors as well as competitors will receive prizes at the annual student alumni Horticulture Show in the Dairy Building. Visitors are welcomed to the show which opens at 6 o'clock Friday evening.

The show will be in charge of students in horticulture. James W. Shearer '35, president of the Horticulture club, will be in charge of the exhibition. Prof. G. W. Stout, who is chairman of the Horticulture faculty committee for the show, will act as intermediary between the student show committees and the faculty in the horticulture department.

The committees and their chairmen are: Daniel W. Llewellyn '35, premiums; Charles J. Stoll, store; Harold K. Smith '35 publicity; Leroy C. Strasser '36, materials; and Joseph W. Thomas '35, planning.

Presidents of the clubs in horticulture will be in charge of exhibits of their departments. These are: Robert M. Brock '35, Topion club; James C. Gillan '35, Crab Apple club; James D. Miller '35, Vegetable Gardening club; Charles M. Rick '37, plant breeding; and Paul Sacco '35, Floral club. The Home Economics display will be supervised by Miss Florence L. Adolph and Miss Harriett R. Balberg of the department.

Twenty-five dollar prizes and numerous ribbons, fruits, and flower prizes will be awarded to the winners in the various classes. The products which will be judged Saturday morning are fruit, John L. McCartney, instructor in pomology extension; vegetables, Jesse M. Huffington, professor of vegetable gardening extension; and flowers, Alfred O. Rasmussen, instructor in ornamental horticulture extension.

Homecoming Program Lists New Features

city cross-country team. Alumni will be entertained at dinner at their respective fraternities and the annual alumni meetings will be held. Alumnae will be the guests of the senior women at dinner at MacAllister hall at 5:45 o'clock. Both alumni and alumnae, seniors, College faculty, and guests are invited to attend the annual cider party in the Armory at 8:30 o'clock.

No program has been arranged for this occasion; and informally will reign supreme. Members of Blue, Key, junior honorary hat society, will act as ushers, and several seniors will be present at the door to keep out all uninvited guests.

Another innovation, a dutch-treat breakfast sponsored by the Penn State Christian Association, will be held in the Sandwich Shop in the basement of Old Main at 9:00 o'clock Sunday morning. Although no formal speeches are planned, Dean G. W. "Daddy" Groff '07, of Lignan University, Canton, China; Dean Ralph L. Watts, chairman of the P. S. C. A. board of directors; and Harry W. Seamans, general secretary, will be present.

The week-end's activities will be brought to a close with the chapel service in Schwab auditorium at 11 o'clock Sunday morning. Dr. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Pittsburgh, will be the speaker.

Lingerer Plans Tour

Dr. Fred F. Lingerer, of the department of agricultural economics, will conduct a class in farm marketing to Philadelphia next Wednesday to inspect the various channels through which farm products reach the consumer.

Registration Survey Reveals 36 Foreign Born Students Here

Data on the recent registration compiled in the Registrar's office reveals that eight foreign and thirty-six foreign born students are enrolled in Penn State this semester. Only one of the foreign students is a woman, while five of the foreign born ones are co-eds.

France, India, Canada, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Canal Zone are represented by these eight foreign students. The freshman and sophomore classes lead the foreign born population of the student body with ten representatives each, while the senior class has eight, and the junior class six. There is also one graduate and one two-year student.

Jorge E. Valdejuoli '35, of Rio Piedras, Puerto Rico, and the Canal Zone are represented by these eight foreign students.

Letter Box

To the Editor: Albert Kaleda's enthusiasm to discuss the disappearance of the two bronze lions that used to grace the front of our campus led me to investigate.

If Kaleda had made his observations closer, he would have seen that they were African lions, obviously not the type that roam the Nittany Mountains. Several years ago these glorious specimens were purchased second-hand from a zoological garden (zoo to you). Criticism by the Froth in 1931-32 made it necessary to remove said lions.

dras; and John H. Calvin '37, of San Francisco de Macoris, are both registered from Puerto Rico. Alexander J. Macdonnell '35, of Pedro Miguel, and Margaret J. Kalar '36, of Balboa, are from the Canal Zone. Jayanti Trivedi, graduate student, comes here all the way from Bhavnagar, India, while Dominique M. Trour, two-year student, is from Montastruc la Carsellere, France. Charles T. Simpson, graduate student, is registered from Oxford, Nova Scotia, and William E. D'Ann '38 is from Lahaina, Hawaii.
