Secret of Campus Underground Passages Known by Only 3 of 5,000 Students Here

Three Watts hall men told a reporter last night the fascinating story of how they crawled over a mile through the steam and water tunnels which honeycomb the campus supplying heat and water to the various buildings at midnight Friday.

"I don't know why we did it," one of the trio said, "feet was just was just with the steam and water to the various buildings at midnight Friday.

While crawling through the tunnels through a manhole behind the Physics building and from there crawled down to the Center drive branch of the tunnels.

"It was terrible between the Physics building and the auditorium. We had to crawl on our stomachs and the heat was so terrific you could hardly stand it. One interesting thing we found there was that the steam mains into the Women's building with all his strength. The men found that the tunnel branching down towards to you down to work the North Liberal Arts building are very old and are enclosed in logs to insulate them," one said.

The "explorers" were equipped with pocket fiashlights and were in the tunnels from shortly after 10 o'clock until a little after midnight. They all said it was an experience worth having and one of them exhibited some very dirty clothes which in the voled while in one of the way around the pipes, approximately eight feet under the ground.

INTRAMURAL HIGHLIGHTS

Beginning with this issue, this rather spasmodic colyum changes hands. Vance Packard, former proud papa, will devote his energies to writing about that legalized mayhem, wrestling.

Five cage matches were run off on Thursday night as intramural basketball officially opened, and while no one team showed extraordinary ability and scores ran anywhere from two to thirty-five point leads, each team had one thing in common. It prayed for a winning score.

Spectacular "one minute to play" finishes were lacking as was team coperation. Instead, "kick the ball all around the court" tactics prevailed in most of the games.

As for the meets themselves, Sigma Tau Phi really worked to defeat Sigma Chi 29-22 and the Phi Sigma Deltas kept Acacia plenty worried before the final whistle handed the victory to the latter with a two point margin. The score, 20-18.

Something serious was lacking in the Alpha Chi Rho quintet as is evident by a 45-10 defeat handed that group by Theta Kappa Phi. Some of the more lively games included the 26-14 encounter which Sigma Alpha Epsilon by a non-fraternity unit, group by Theta Kappa Phi. Some of the more lively games included the 26-14 encounter which Sigma Alpha Epsilon won from Tau Phi Delta; and the terrific defeat of Theta Nu Epsilon by a non-fraternity unit, This game ended 27-8.

The second leg of the tourney was run off Sunday when Gray's boarding house walloped Sigma Pi 15-8; Phi Delta Theta walked away with Phi Epsilon Di Galla Theta way with Phi Epsilon Di Galla Theta Sigma and Phi Kappa Phi.
