Theologian To Discuss 'Democracy, Religion'

The Rev. Joseph M. M. Gray, one of the foremost theologians of the present day and chancellor of the American University, Washington, D. C., will speak on "Democracy and Religion" at Sunday morning chapel service in Schwab auditorium.

Born in Montgomery county in 1877, Dr. Gray was graduated from Dickinson Seminary, Washington, D. C., in 1896. Subsequently, he received his B. D. degree from Drew Theological Seminary; D.D. from Baker University; Litt. D. from Syracuse University and S.T.D. from Dickinson College.

Dr. Gray was ordained into the Methodist Episcopal ministry in 1901 and has since served charges in Baltimore, Md., Washington, Kansas City, Scranton and Detroit. He was recently appointed chancellor of the American University at Washington.

During the war, Dr. Gray lectured on history and religious subjects in army camps in England and France. He has served as a member of the general conference of the Methodist Church four times and is a trustee of Drew Seminary.

He is the author of "The Old Faith in the New Day," "The Contemporary Christ," "An Adventure in Orthodoxy," "Sufficient Ministers" and "Concerning the Faith." He served as an exchange preacher in England during the summer of 1923.

H. A. Everett Resigns

Sugar, Spices, and Everything That's Nice Contends Mac Hall Co-Ed's Beauty Advice

Believe it or not, the women of Mac Hall exist, not on love alone, as might be supposed, but on really substantial food.

To feed the 400 girls who eat there, 260 pounds of meat are ordered at one time and 240 pounds of turkey for a Sunday dinner. Potatoes disappear at the rate of a barrel a day while six dozen heads of lettuce are consumed at a meal. If canned fruit is served, 12 gallons vanish.

Every three days 100 pounds of sugar are purchased while the 58 gallons of milk and eight gallons of cream consumed every day aid in the development of muscle necessary to fulfill the requirements of equal suffrage.

Three gallons of olives are devoured at a meal, while 12 pounds of coffee stimulate the girls to better work or toss through sleepless nights. Other items on the menu vanish in the same startling figures—40 pounds of butter daily; 50 pies, 25 loaves of bread, and 35 cakes involving the use of 98 pounds of flour. Sixty quarts of ice cream melt away.

Four ranges and four ovens in the kitchen each accommodate 50-pound roasts. There are three 10-gallon coffee tanks and three electric toasters which brown 12 slices of bread at once. An electric dishwasher quickly disposes of the 3,125 pieces of china and silverware used each meal, and a steam dryer eliminates dish towels.
