Library Adds Electric Gadgets As Part of Modernization Plan

Thermostats, rheostats, and an electric eye have added a lot of modernistic atmosphere to the College library. All these are part of Librarian Willard P. Lewis' drive to make the library a more healthful and pleasing place to study.

Students had long complained that the reason they spent such little time in Mr. Lewis' emporium was because of stuffiness and improper lighting. So the librarian got together with Mr. Sigworth and his corps of grounds and buildings engineers.

After hiding rheostats and thermostats in inconspicuous places and adding a few extra fans in the cellar, Mr. Sigworth finally hit upon the idea of spraying water into the fan as it circulated the air.

No one seems willing to take the honor and glory for this scheme because of its indifferent success. Confirmed only was the fact that it had originated somewhere in Mr. Ebert's domain in third floor, Old Main.

This electric eye is very, very sensitive. It can only stand so much light. Then it blinks, if that is what an electric eye does, and the lights automatically shut off. This is unquestionably the first time that eye "blinkings" have been harnessed. A difficulty seemed to arise when the eye wouldn't open when it became dark.

Only the last time your correspondent was in the library, he saw some Ebertmen monkeying with the eye. From the top of a step ladder in the balcony where the eye rests close to the sky-light, one of these Ebertmen put his finger in the eye to see what makes it not work.

Now for this matter of unusual vocational books. It seems that Mr. Lewis stole a march on Prof. Stevens. Prof. Stevens claims that all us students are conservative, because we regard ourselves as "embryo capitalists."

Bibliographies, indices, and all matter of information about such professions as beauty culture, mechanical dentistry, barbering, postal service, and embalming are endless. Space won't permit us to list all the different fields that are open to perplexed job-hunters.

Each Puff Less Acid A LIGHT SMOKE OF RICH, RIPE-BODIED TOBACCO Over a period of years, certain basic advances have been made in the selection and treatment of cigarette tobaccos for Lucky Strike Cigarettes. They include preliminary analyses of the tobacco selected; use of center leaves; the higher heat treatment of tobacco ("Toasting"); consideration of acid-alkaline balance, with consequent definite improvement in flavor; and controlled uniformity in the finished product. All these combine to produce a superior cigarette—a modern cigarette, a cigarette made of rich, ripe-bodied tobaccos—A Light Smoke.
