CONTINUING THE RHYME
 When Jill and Jack were coming back, their tank was not so full. Said Jack to Jill—"Here we'll refill,—with me they have a pull. Their gas is pure, and clean, I'm sure, their service prompt and fine, they are polite, their prices right,—they're leaders in their line!" (That's what they all say now.)

Jack and Jill shot up the hill. The tank was filled with pep. The Gas we sell sure fills the bill. That's how we make our Rep.

Penn State Students To Have Own Gov't.

The actual legislative duties of Student government lie with the Student Council, for this body recommends, creates, maintains, and regulates the customs and traditions of the College. It also takes the necessary steps to support and carry into effect any policy to sustain the good name of the College, and to promote mutual understanding between the faculty and student body.

The primary mission of the Student Board is to act as a coordinating unit between the Student Council and the College administration, meeting once a week with the Dean of Men to discuss student problems. The Board makes recommendations to the Council for the final sanction of that body, and it also has the power to serve as a disciplinary body, making recommendations directly to the College administration.

The Student Tribunal, composed of five members selected by the Student Council, has judicial powers in meting out punishment to freshmen who violate College customs. As reorganized last year, the Tribunal enlists the aid of the campus societies in enforcing freshman customs and punishing offenders.

The women students at Penn State have their own student governing bodies, known as the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Senate formulates all rules and regulations governing women students, penalizing as it sees fit all offenders of these regulations.

The House of Representatives deals with rules of lesser importance governing the women's dormitories, quiet hour, and the signing out for social privileges, and appoints all chairmen of social events. This group has no voice in any of the actions taken by the Senate, merely making suggestions to the higher governing body.

Students at Penn State elect their class officers each spring at a time designated by Student Council, and at present the men and women students have separate elections, selecting a different set of class officers. An Elections Code for the men's government before the elections, and an elections committee appointed from Student Council conducts the election. A violation of the adopted code disqualifies any candidate.

Customs Have Become Traditions of Campus

College dances, or when escorting women to and from such functions. This rule shall be rigidly enforced until Thanksgiving recess.

7. Freshmen shall be permitted to attend authorized church social functions at the churches, but shall not accompany young women to or from such affairs. The regular freshman attire shall be worn at these times.

8. Freshmen shall not smoke on the campus. The campus shall be designated as the area within these bounds: Park Avenue on the North; College Avenue on the South; North Atherton Street on the West; and East Drive on the East.

9. Freshmen shall attend all class meetings, athletic contests, and mass meetings, and shall not leave the same until it is closed by the proper authorities or a reasonable excuse is offered.

10. Every Freshman shall wear during the first month of college a regulation badge upon which his name is legibly printed in black letters not less than one-half inch in height. The badge shall also bear the name of his home town and his curriculum.

11. No members of the other classes may grant immunities to freshmen.

CINEMANIA

This, gentle reader and fellow cinemaniacs, is a column of doubtful virtue devoted to the cinema, a form of American art which seems to appeal to the college crowd above all other forms.

The roster at the Cathaum theater begins Monday and Tuesday with "The General Died at Dawn," the movie you've heard about and wondered when you were going to see. The screen play was adapted from the novel by Clifford Odets, whose "Waiting for Lefty," "Paradise Lost," and "Awake and Sing" have been the smash hits of the past few seasons. Quiet on the Western Front" is the director of this war drama in the Far East. The plot involves a war-lord whose schemes of conquering China lead to a series of weird experiences in the lives of the principals. With Odets' deft touch, this is something out of the usual Hollywood war drama.

Wednesday to the Cathaum comes the comparatively under-publicized "Girls' Dormitory," starring a newcomer to the land of fabulous box-office receipts, Simone Simon, the French actress, who has recently risen on the Hollywood horizon to shine quietly. Twentieth Century followed the strategic tactic of not building her up, with the result that La Simon got more notoriety than any star since Garbo, of whom nobody knew anything either. And so with a brilliant debut into America cinema, Simone Simon comes as unannounced as Haley's comet. The story is enclosed in the walls of a girls' school, of which Herbert Marshall is the director. The love interest wavers between Marshall and La Simon.

Thursday, the Cathaum features "My Man Godfrey," with William

Powell, Carole Lombard, Alice Brady, Gail Patrick, and Alan Mowbray. Powell's comedy has always been good. As "My Man Godfrey," Powell takes the part of a blue-blood in disguise who becomes a butler in the home of the Bullock family. His principal trials are evasions of the amorous wiles of Carole Lombard and the suspicion of Gail Patrick. Meanwhile, Alan Mowbray, a college friend, tries to reveal his identity with ensuing complications.

"Pepper," a comedy with Jane Withers, Irvin S. Cobb, Slim Sumner, and Helen Wilkes, plays at the Cathaum Friday of Freshman Week. Irvin S. Cobb plays the part of the tough old bird whom youngster Jane Withers softens in an entertaining series of events which constitute the plot.
