Class Customs Here Undergo Many Changes in Past Decade

When the 1000 freshman men don their green dinks and other freshman apparel tomorrow morning to attend their first eight o'clock, they will be wearing customs that have been greatly simplified from the customs of past years.

Ten years ago only members of the senior class were allowed to go bareheaded. The privilege of walking across the front campus or of occupying the front campus wall was limited to members of the upper two classes. When chapel exercises were dismissed, the faculty passed out first, followed by the seniors, juniors, sophomores, and freshmen.

Freshmen were allowed to enter the Old Old Main building only through certain doors. Each year the sophomores issued a proclamation to the freshmen. Only one of these were allowed to be issued during one term. Sophomores and freshmen were not allowed to go without coats except on Stunt night or when engaging in one of the college scraps. The black ties and socks, as well as the dink were required to be worn by the freshmen. They were allowed to use tobacco in no form while in public, nor were they allowed to linger in the vicinity of Co-op corner.

Freshmen were forbidden to walk on the grass at any time or to speak back to upperclassmen. They were also warned not to visit the vicinity where the quarters of the Student Tribunal were located. They were not allowed to place their hands in their pockets, and of course it was considered improper for them to be seen associating with any ladies within the three-mile limit of Old Main. Even entering pool rooms was not allowed.

Only members of the upper three classes enjoyed the privilege of adorning their faces with hair growths. With the R.O.T.C. uniform a band of black braid was worn by freshmen. It was necessary for members of the lower class to carry matches in order to supply their upperclassmen when asked to do so.

Freshmen were told to buy their dinks only from the men authorized by the graduate manager and the secretary of the Christian Association. Sole power was invested in the Tribunal to interpret any of the customs. On the Saturday, two weeks in advance of final examinations, Move-up day was observed. At this time the seniors donned Lion Coats and each of the other classes would advance one year in their customs.
