

ARMY SOCCERMEN DEADLOCK PENN STATE

Lions Unable To Break 0-0 Tie In Extra Period

West Pointers Use Charging Tactics To Hold Booters To 15th Stalemate Since 1926; Outplayed By State

By ROY NICHOLS

Undefeated but held to their 15th tie since 1926, the Lion booters vainly tussled through two extra periods at West Point, Wednesday, to remove a 0-0 score with Army, but the game ended without either team tallying.

Playing a charging brand of soccer, the West Pointers succeeded in muddling the Lion offensive to no little degree. Their own forward line ranged, the Army team put up a desperately defensive battle the entire 98 minutes of play. Their rushing backs gave the Nittany forwards little opportunity for pre-arranged attacks. It was something new for the Statesmen, something they had not previously encountered this season.

Lions Start Weekly

Although the Jeffeymen started out weakly in the first half, they quickly picked up and outplayed Army during the rest of the game. But the final score did not show the Lion aggression and dominance. Only the Army goalie's timely saves of shots by Franny Megrail and Carl Wacker were recorded against State. Only Army maneuvers of charging and Mulish defense deadlocked the game.

Aided by the stopping power of Bob Schuler and Freddy Spyker, Dick Hang handled the ball only twice at the goal. Av Taylor and Sol Michoff futilely clogged the Lion aggression.

Play in Dark

When the game entered the extra sessions, it was almost pitch-dark. Flashlights from the side-lines were played on the white-painted ball.

Captain Bill Jeffrey will have a week-and-a-half to get the team in shape for the Navy contest at Annapolis, November 13. He'll need all of that time, for although the Middy record is unimpressive, Woody Hosterman, wingman, was injured in the contest Wednesday. Woody received a severe kick across the ankle.

JOE METRO

Having recovered sufficiently from an injury suffered against Syracuse, Joe is expected to start at fullback tomorrow.

on pass defense that still is a glaring weakness, and practicing against Penn plays was the program followed in preparation for the Philadelphia fracas.

Higgins announced an important change in his starting lineup. Tor Toretti, a regular at guard for a year and a half, has been switched to center, a post he filled in high school and on the freshman team two years ago. This was necessitated by the return to a starting role of Co-captain Johnny Economos.

Barantovich, Metro to Start Alex Barantovich and Joe Metro, both injured in the Syracuse tilt, will be in the starting lineup. Lloyd Ickes, who has been a halfback so far this season, was switched to fullback and will probably relieve Metro during the game. Danny DeMarino will not start, but there is no doubt that he will be used against the Quakers. Johnny Patrick's injured ankle is better and he may get into the affair tomorrow.

Harry Harrison and Tony Giannantonio will both be in the starting array before a hometown crowd. Harry's second half kickoff touchdown jaunt last year is still a vivid memory to all who saw State throw a scare

New Center

SEVER TORETTI

To fill a weak spot noticeable in last week's game, Tor has been shifted to the pivot post for the duel with the Quakers.

Penn Will Mirror Lion Gridgers' Formations

The old stand-by, the single wing-back formation will once again line up against the Lion gridgers this season in the form of Penn's Quaker eleven tomorrow on Franklin field.

Penn uses exactly the same set-up for their regular formation that State employs—with the unbalanced line, weak-side end split, and plays running from right or left formation. A spread formation is used sparingly to vary their attack.

There is a great deal of difference between the two teams in the type of set-up used in punt formation. Harvey Harman uses an unbalanced line on kicks with his strong side tackle split a yard from the guard. The ends are split about three yards with the three protecting backs all lined up evenly two yards behind the line, two of them on the strong side.

The Quakers grid outfit is one of the many teams this year who adopted the five-man line on defense which was first used successfully several years ago at Temple by Ox DaGrossa. Properly used it is effective against passes, and when interchanged with the six-man line it can be very confusing to assignment-conscious opponents.

Watching Penn's exponents of the Mill's system of punting is always an added feature of the game with the Quakers. Working on the principle that a properly propelled, lightly kicked spiral can be well controlled, the Penn kickers tutored by Paul Scull of 1928 All-American fame, have abounded in excellent spot punters. Red Kellet, George Munger, and last year's Franny Murray are some Quakers who have gained notoriety with opponents for their deviously coffin-corner-kicks.

BETWEEN THE LIONS

A record which has been ignored somewhat by Penn State sports followers has fallen into further oblivion this season.

We refer to the Penn State cross-country accomplishments. In 12 years, the Nittany Lion harriers lost only three dual meets. This season, two meets have been lost already.

In the past, State always had a fine dual meet record, going undefeated year after year. Expected fine showings in the Intercollegiate usually resulted in an also-ran category.

At present, on the one hand, the Lion harriers have reversed their field. They have had a losing dual meet season. On the other hand, the Intercollegiate has not arrived yet.

The team this year should have been as good if not better than previous outfits. When we say "should," we are basing the argument on the abilities of the runners. Perhaps the runners will make up for their laxity in the Intercollegiate in two weeks. A victory then would mean permanent possession of the trophy for the Lions, who have won it four times.

Pete Olesy, the captain, was undefeated in dual meets and last year was runner-up for the IC-4A title. He has been beaten twice: Frank Mauls, Norm Gordon, and Herb Haz-
