FIRE HIGGINS, they're saying, and get a new coach

. But why? Because we lost to Bucknell?

Because we lost to Cornell?

wolves he loose again

Because for the past decade we havent had what might be called a great football team?

If such is the basis for this talk of dismissing Higgins—and the Collegian believes this to be so then let's have the courage to be open-minded and ian, let's have the courage to be frank, let's have the courage to be honest with ourselves and the coach and the team, let's have the courage to face the real issue

The issue of supply the necessary material which any couch needs before he can build a great team

OF COURSE, you may say The material the year is better than Penn State has had, in more than a decade Perhaps it is, we won't aigue

But this not the question The question is not how does today's team compare with yesterday's, but how does today's team compare with other teams of today?

It is here that the whole story cames out in hol i rehef

Now we may have some good players. We may have some great players. But the fact is that one great player or even a handful of great players annot in themselves become a great football team And not even a great coach can make a great tean out of them

That such is the case was made obvious to those who witnessed the bone-crushing display of superior manpower demonstrated by Cornell Satur-day It was made obvious by the fact that Andy Kerr, recognized as one of the greatest conches of all time, couldn't win many games at Colgate University last year. It is made obvious by the fact that Pop Wainei, another recognized great coach, has been unable to win many games at Temple University this year. It is made obvious by the fact that Dick Harlow, still another recognized great coach, has been unable to win many games at Hurvird University this year. And so on and on

WHAT IS NEEDED, then, to produce a team which will win consistently is not only a coach and a few great players, but a horde of great playersde like that handed to Jock Sutherland at Pittsburgh, a holde like that handed to Elme Layden at Notre Dame, a horde like that handed to Bernie Hierman at Minnesota

And if this is what we want-if what we want is a team which will win consistently in topnotch, ubsidized competition-then we must go out on

FOR THE CAUSE

LAST NIGHT, the Penn State Christian Association launched its annual campaign foi funds with which to suport its countless social and educational activities-activities which reach an aggregate total of some fifty thousand students during the year

In the past, the association generally has been successful in soliciting the voluntary aid of stu dents and faculty in carrying out its program. The Collegian does not doubt but that students and faculty who realize the manifold opportunities which the association's program offers will push the drive over the top again this year.
