WHAT DO TODAY'S SCREAMING HEADLINES MEAN?
 AT LAST—THE UNCENSORED VERSION of
 "ALL QUIET ON THE WESTERN FRONT" with LEW AYRES
 From the Book By Erich Maria Remarque

Pictured is one of the three murals painted for the Mineral Industries Building by Edmund M Ashe of Pittsburgh on the commission of an alumni committee. The murals are the only ones on the campus and the first of their type ever painted.

The mural reproduced at left portrays the "change of shift" at a coal mine, with the miners ready to leave the cage elevator at the top of the shaft. The second, not pictured here, shows iron workers tapping metal from the blast furnace at night. The third depicts a driller and tool dresser of the oil and gas fields working on the derrick floor of a drilling rig.

point was registered as a melee of Tech players added to the State total by accidentally knocking the ball over the line. Ernst was the last State man to touch the ball.

Hitting their stride in the third quarter, the Lions ripped the net for five goals. Ernst tallied his second, Walt Hosterman shot a long boot from his halfback post, Bigott collected two and King "rang the bell for his second cigar" before the amazed Tartans could put a stop to the Blue and White onslaught.

Schuler Moves To Forward
 Going into the final period with a nine-point lead, the State lineup took a word appearance. Schuler, the biggest man on the squad, was at center forward and practically every other man was trying his hand at a new position. The revision, expected to afford Tech a scoring opportunity and make the game a little more closely contested, only brought on the "Schuler bombardment."

Bob Ernst, dependable Lion forward, managed to squeeze in his third tally within the last two minutes of play. And with that last point the 1939 Penn State contingent established a new Lion scoring record by surpassing the 12 points run up against Western Maryland last year.

Writer Bares Demise Of 'Play For Pay' At Pitt

The story of football subsidization at the University of Pittsburgh "supplies a laboratory case history of what has happened, or what is happening, or what may happen, wherever there is play for pay" Francis Wallace, noted sports authority, says today in The Saturday Evening Post.

The climax of play for pay at Pitt, Wallace says, was a clash between Chancellor John G Bowman and Dr John Bain Sutherland but it was also a clash between the stadium and the Cathedral of Learning, Dr Bowman's dream university building, a "conflict between academic ambitions and rewards—the old business of brain vs brawn, in short."

"Football subsidization began at Pitt for the same reason as at other colleges—the game caught on," the article says.

"In the first test, the esthete gave way to the athlete, the cathedral bowed to the stadium. It was agreed that the stadium was to come first, to be financed by a bond issue. Dr Bowman, however, went right on with his campaign for the cathedral which was to be erected on a pay-as-you-go basis. And he privately decided to recapture the powerful athletic department as soon as his opportunity came.

"The athletic problem was again dropped in the chancellor's lap at a time which was, for him, propitious" when Sutherland and Don Harrison, athletic director, clashed after the 1937 Rose Bowl game. At that time Bowman "had seen the fulfillment of his dream" get Grade A material Pitt went out, and got them with a high-pressure organization," Wallace writes.

Local Artist Gets College Showing

An exhibition of the work of a local painter, Miss Lucie M Manley, sponsored by the State College Woman's Club, is being shown in the College Art Gallery, Room 303 Main Engineering, until November 4.

3 Murals By Edmund Ashe Installed In MI Art Gallery

Three murals, unique in the art world and currently receiving national recognition, have been installed in the rotunda and lobby of the Mineral Industries Building. The murals, depicting Pennsylvania industrial scenes, are unique also because they were paid for not by a College appropriation nor by a class gift, but entirely by alumni. The work of Edmund M Ashe, a well-known Pittsburgh artist, the vividly colored murals show the romance and panoramic drama of everyday life of a million Pennsylvanians in mines, mills, and oil wells. Ashe was selected from a long list of artists by the alumni committee because he has been brought up in the environment which the murals depict.

The murals are the latest and largest single addition to the Mineral Industries Art Gallery of 107 paintings of Pennsylvania industrial scenes. The only one of its kind in the world, the Art Gallery is made up entirely of pictures painted by Pennsylvania artists and donated to the Gallery by the artists, alumni, and friends. All the paintings, valued at $40,000, are on display in the Mineral Industries Building.

Alumni who underwrote the costs of the murals were L. C. Campbell, Pittsburgh, C. E. Cowan, Greensburg, H. D. Easton, Shreveport, La., W. A. Maxwell, Denver, Colo., D. R. Mitchell, head of the department of mining here, Dean Edward H. Stedie, L. P. Teas, Houston, Texas, J. B. Wariner, Philadelphia, Paul Weir, Chicago, M. J. Wilson, Philadelphia, and W. P. Young, Peeking, Ill.

"THE FIRST SHELL HIT US ... THEN"

An explosion aft. The sound of rending steel. Light bulbs broke in their sockets; men were thrown off their feet. The conning-tower eye ports were under. She was going down fast, now. Seventy, eighty feet. The destroyer passed directly overhead.

We promise you an exciting experience in this week's Post. A pulse-thumping story of how it feels to be in a U. S. submarine. Scouting the enemy. In the heat of battle. Here's a story of modern submarine warfare told with photographic clarity by a man who has seen service overseas.
