'Athlete of the Week' Was Slow Starting

Mark Vinzant, Swimming Co-Captain Who Set Record Saturday, Was Poor In Early Meets

Parmi Nous, Blue Key, Diuds, manager of cross-country, co-captain of swimming and—even his best friends and Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity brothers told him—a lousy swimmer this year. Great guns in the pool as a varsity man for the last two seasons, freshman captain in 1937, and a good high school swimmer before that, he wasn't doing much this year. At Penn he lost to an old school rival He slipped on the turns in losing that race, the Collegian said, so they called him "Slip." Coach Bob Galbraith rode him relentlessly.

Which is a flowery enough setting for an Horatio Alger story of the man who made up his mind to come back. And now he's chosen the Penn State Collegian's first Athlete of the Week.

Last Saturday the poor run-down, out-of-condition (don't you believe it!) co-captain turned in the best performance of his collegiate career and the best individual performance this season by ripping and tearing a full three seconds off the College's 150-yard backstroke record as he negotiated the distance in 1:46 6 against Washington and Jefferson.

Planned Comeback The Horatio Alger part of it is that it didn't just happen. Mark (that's his name, incidentally, Mark Harvey Vinzant, Jr., if you want the whole thing) planned it that way. Five days before the meet he had a steak dinner he'd set the record. Reason He knew he could do it because he came close at Penn even though he did "slip on the turns" and lose his race. Other vital statistics Phi Sigma Kappa rushing chairman this year stands five-eleven short-cropped blonde hair smooth boy likes his girlfriends sleek and plump his eggs boiled doesn't think this article should be written popular well-liked senior in commerce and finance easy to look at.

Basketball Continued from page 3) vain attempt to check the Lion rush. But the aSilors, handicapped by erratic passing and poor marksmanship, failed to produce anything formidable in the way of resistance. Outstanding was the success of the famed Lawther "deliberate offense." Much-maligned in previous contests this year, it functioned smoothly against the Sailors and brought congratulations from the Navy coaching staff on the "coolest ball seen at Annapolis for some time."

Enjoying a well-earned rest, the Nittany eagles will dull only lightly in short afternoon sessions this week, keeping in condition for their contest with Rutgers at New Brunswick, N. J., on February 3.

Kluger Scores Hit In Chinese Drama

DESIGNED AND DIRECTED By JAMES DOLL THE CAST

By EMANUEL ROTH "She has an engaging exterior, but her heart is corrupt!" How naive! Simple! Pedantic! In the language of the Penn State sophisticate, the words would be: "The babe's o k, but the doublecrossing- &I?%.*!!"

We shan't stretch the story To come to the point, what we simply mean to say is that the Flyers' weekend triumph, "The Circle of Chalk," was no fare for the calloused sophisticate who expected bullets, blood and badmen to swarm over Schwab Auditorium. "The Circle of Chalk," one of the most beautifully-produced and technically perfect productions ever to hit Heitzel Hall, was a paradox—a paradox of magnificent color and simple tale that dared to descend to the banal fundamentals of a plot without punch-lines, a story minus the elements of belly-laughs, sorrowing tears, leg-curticisms and slithering hips.

And yet, the audience enjoyed "The Circle of Chalk"—enjoyed it thoroughly. The bitterness of a mother who, "famed," is about to lose her life and her child, the anguish of a prostitute who, as a devoted wife and mother, is trying to live down her past, the enmity of brother toward sister—these are but a few of the naive fundamentals whose resolution makes James Doll's first local production an outstanding notch in Penn State's dramatic string.

THE STORY—Ch'ang Hai-Tang (Thelma Kluger), ex "sing-song" girl, becomes the second wife of the wealthy Ma Chun-Shing (David Siegel). Jealousy, the desire for Hai Tang's beautiful five-year-old son, Shu-Lang, (Sack Kennedy, Jr.) induces Madame Ma (Florence Marquardt), his first wife, to poison her husband. She is aided by her illicit paramour, Ch'ao (Herbert Doroshov) who is clerk of the Governor's Court. Madame Ma accuses Hai-Tang of the deed and charges that the child is her own.

Hai-Tang is brought to court, bribed witnesses, Chao, and physical torture force her to confess. Taken for final sentence to the Supreme Judge (Norman Shandelman), the child, in the presence of all the witnesses and parties concerned in the murder, is placed in a circle of chalk. Hai-Tang, aided by her brother Ch'ang Lin (Eugene Sheffel), goes free as the chalked circle drawn before the Supreme Judge's seat, proves that the child is her own. Ch'ao and Madame Ma are sentenced to be beheaded by Ch'ang Lin, the corrupt witnesses exited.

Thelma Kluger as the exotic Ch'ang Hai-Tang easily took top honors in the production, with a performance that ranks among the best we've witnessed on the Penn State stage. Miss Kluger, a comparative unknown who in previous productions had confined her talents to four or five lines, put all she had into her major role. Regal, graceful, radiant, the heroine transmitted her bitter emotions with a flexibility of voice and action that tore through all the somber and placid exterior of a mature audience.

Florence Marquardt as the hateful, attractive villainess, Madame Ma, was flawlessly effective as the relentless first wife of Chun-Shing. Herbert Doroshov, as Ch'ao, her paramour and co-villain, turned in an equally creditable characterization. David Siegel as Chun-Shing, Hai-Tang's husband, was, to put it bluntly, puzzling. His smirks, slowness of reactions, forced anger and irrational gesticulations were wholly incompatible with

Hoover Asks Aid Of College Teams To Support Finns

Issuing an appeal for collegiate aid in raising funds for Finnish relief, Herbert Hoover, as chairman of the Finnish Relief Fund Committee, urged amateur athletes to contribute its share to the campaign in a speech before an Eastern Athletic Association meeting Saturday.

Colleges, Hoover maintained, should do their bit in aiding in the "most courageous struggle by a courageous people to maintain their independence against odds which no nation has ever faced before."

American amateur athletes, Hoover declared, "which I feel sure has a certain special relationship to that of the Finns," could reimburse the Finns to some slight extent for the $8,000,000 they spent in preparations for staging the 1940 Olympic games. First college to schedule a benefit winter sports event for Finnish relief was Dickinson College at Carlisle, Pa., which announced Saturday that it would contribute the proceeds from its basketball game with Washington and Jefferson February 6. Many other colleges are planning similar contributions to the fund.

Emory Announces New Time For ROTC Classes

Two-hour afternoon ROTC classes next semester will be scheduled from 1 to 3 p. m. instead of from 2 to 4 p. m., Col. Ambrose R. Emery, head of the department of military science and tactics, announced yesterday. The change will be made to help students who in the past have had considerable difficulty or inconvenience in scheduling the period from 2 to 4 p. m., Colonel Emery said, particularly in avoiding interference with laboratory, shop or drawing room classes of other departments. The fiftieth anniversary of its founding will be celebrated by the University of Chicago in 1941.

Ice Rink Gives Hockey Lions Chance To Prepare To Face Powerful Foes

Finally getting an opportunity to hold daily practices on ice, Penn State's hockey Lions are drilling intensively for two "guellers" after final examinations, with the Hershey Junior Bears, February 2, and the Princeton icemen the next day. Also planned after the mid-year vacation is a trip to West Virginia, where the Davis-coached aggregation will battle teams in Huntington and Charleston. The team has been drilling on the new College rink on the tennis courts and has been developing fast. Coach Davis stated the Lions also will be bolstered in next semester's games by the return of Penny Gates, flashy wingman who is on the ineligible list.
