

CINEMANIA

With Barbara Stanwyck and Fred MacMurray holding the lead roles, "Remember the Night," playing at the State Theatre today and tomorrow, offers one of the most delightful, fast-moving, wisecracking and at the same time honey, down-to-earth light romances for your entertainment.

"Remember the Night" concerns itself mainly with a feminine crook who eschews the term kleptomaniac herself—whom a rising young district attorney aims to put in jail.

Oddly enough the D A turns around and goes bail for the young lady; falls in love with her, and actually has to make a speech to try to convince her to jump the bail he put up for her.

No! You haven't guessed it, yet! It's a picture you'll not forget in a hurry and just the one to start off the second semester's entertainment.

GOLDOLOCKS AND THE TWELVE BEARS

Everyone should know the story of Goldilocks and the Twelve Bears. Goldilocks, of course, is the freshman rushee who will be so much in evidence the next ten days. The Twelve Bears aren't so bad as they sound—they're really only twelve sororities.

When the fairy story Goldilocks met up with her bears, she had a choice to make. The Big Bear's porridge dish, chair, and bed were large and impressive. The Middle-Sized Bear's were attractive and desirable. But Goldilocks ended her adventure asleep in the Little Bear's Bed. She didn't pick that bed because it was impressive. She chose it because it was comfortable—because she could fit in.

Our Goldilocks will have the same problem, only this time there are twelve bears. Any one of them—big, middle-sized, and little—has advantages. And, while it may seem foolish to go back to a fairy story for a pattern, she too will do well to choose a sorority because she is comfortable—because she fits in.

Grandma Says

If Goldilocks had a Grandma, she would probably remind her of many things in the next ten days. She would warn her not to judge a house by someone else's opinion, but by her own. She would say choose a house wisely and don't be swayed by any "lead-piping" sales talks or "sob stories." She would warn that sororities that resort to such rushing tactics are only covering up weaknesses. And she would shake her finger and say Granddaughter, whatever you do, sidestep the quality of an "easy" rushee—that of being gullible.

Not all freshmen will be rushed. Grandma would go on, and not all freshmen want to be rushed. Those who aren't rushed are not, contrary to what anyone thinks, lost souls. If they choose to remain independent of any sorority alliance, it is their choice and a commendable one. Sororities are not all of campus life, they are only a minor part.

Grandma would grin a little toothlessly and add. If you're looking for the key to campus activities, you won't find it in any sorority house. In spite of any promises they may make, the only position a sorority can guarantee a pledge is on next rushing season's clean-up committee.

A rushee's part is not entirely passive; there are many things you can do to help. Grandma would offer seriously. Dangling three or four houses on the string just to see how many bids you can get is pure selfishness. Not only is it hard on the house, but a belt of sorority scalps is not going to impress anyone for very long. So, if you know a house well enough to realize that you will not consider it, common courtesy demands that you do not go on accepting its invitations. The house can well use its time and effort on someone who is interested.

Her final bit of advice might be if you can afford a sorority, consider it. If you can't, for heaven's sake don't ask your mother to go without a new washing-machine so you can have a jeweled pin. Sororities are luxuries, she would nod wisely, no matter what anyone tells you during rushing season.
