Trials Will Decide Lion Skin Wearer

The field of candidates to wear the lion skin has been narrowed down to three—Bob Allen, Tom Kelley, and Jacob Shearer—Gene Wettstone, gymnastics coach, announced late last night. The three will take turns wearing the skin and, after these trials, one of the candidates will be picked to wear the skin for the last home game this year and all of next season. Judging will be done by a group of faculty members. Allen will wear the skin today, Kelley at the West Virginia game, and Shearer at the South Carolina game.

1929 Crash Broke Haring Into Radio

The method by which Claude Haring, topnotch sports announcer here to broadcast the Bucknell game, broke into his profession is probably unique in the annals of radio announcing. It took the lamented crash of 1929 to knock the props from under Haring's real estate business and convince him that radio work was his dish. A radio station in his home town, Allentown, heard him while he was active in dramatics and promptly placed him on the staff. From there it was clear sailing.

After four years of announcing in Allentown, Haring clicked at an audition with station WCAU in Philadelphia and stayed there for a year. Since 1935 he has served as sports announcer for the Atlantic Refining Company, sponsors of State games this fall.

Contrary to the general belief, Haring believes that a sports background isn't essential for radio sports announcers as long as they can convey to the listening public in simple words what's happening on the field. The use of technical language can often confuse the audience.

Haring has been on the State campus since Thursday acquainting himself with certain facts necessary for good announcing. He memorizes the names and numbers of players, backs in particular, and offensive plays. To do this he had to gain the confidence of Coach Bob Higgins and his staff by pledging himself to secrecy.

Conger And Jones Return From Recreation Parley

Professor Ray Conger and Dr. Lloyd M. Jones of the School of Physical Education and Athletics, returned Thursday from the 25th annual National Recreation Congress at Cleveland. The theme of the congress was "Recreation Under Present World Conditions." Mayor La Guardia of New York spoke.

The greenhouses north of the Agriculture Building comprise 11,000 square feet of glass.

Jeffrey Stresses Soccer Finesse

Cleverness, not power, is the most important asset a soccer player can have, according to Coach Bill Jeffrey.

Cleverness in ball handling, dribbling, and passing is essential to every good soccer player, the same as these assets are essential to every basketball player, says Jeffrey.

"Power has little place on the soccer field. Again, as in basketball, the passes should be short, deliberately directed to a definite teammate. No power kick can ever put a ball in a specific spot," the soccer coach believes.

The hardest thing to break high school players away from is the use of sheer power and initiate them into the use of strategic playing and finesse in handling the ball, said Jeffrey, in developing his amazing teams over a 14-year period, has taught Penn Staters to use a short kick with knee action.

"The power kick," Jeffrey explains, "is caused by keeping the knee stiff and kicking from the hip. As soon as the player begins the use of knee action, his usefulness to the team increases one hundred per cent."

It was the "Genial Scotchman" who introduced the game of soccer-volleyball here to teach his players adept use of their feet and heads.

In this game they use a different ball and use their feet instead of their hands to bat the ball over the net. Not only is a high degree of skill developed but the players gain confidence in their ability to put the ball in a given spot with ease.

The Lion soccermen are at present holding daily practices to keep in shape for their next tilt scheduled a week from today with Western Maryland here.

Nittany Harriers Tune Up In 7-Mile Endurance Test

Starting to bear down after they have rounded into good condition, the Nittany Lion harriers ran up miles like an adding machine yesterday when they jogged an effortless seven-mile overdistance round on the varsity course.

This workout followed Thursday's three-mile fast pacemaking grind that Coach Chick Werner ordered to determine whether his harriers had the knack of pacing themselves. Each runner had to run the three-mile pace as if he were timing himself for the regular five-mile race.

Boner looms as the number one fullback and Mel Knupp will do the punting from the left halfback position. Walt Wenrick is almost certain to start at the other halfback slot.

Veteran linemen, with two exceptions, will start up front, with co-Captains Morris Bessel and John Plewak sparking the Bisons' forward wall at center and right guard respectively. The other guard will be Nick Priore. Chuck Reed and Charlie Nagel are expected to start at the tackle posts while Fred Gore, seasoned wingman, will team with Jesse Mair, promising sophomore, at end.

NOTICE
On October 3rd, about 10:00, we think some member of the faculty and his wife, accompanied by some out-of-town friends in another car, purchased at the Cold Storage, College Orchards, a bushel of No. 1 McIntosh. The salesman at the Storage who made the sale, realized after the cars had left that he had placed, by mistake, a basket of No. 2 McIntosh in the car. The Horticulture Department would appreciate help in locating this party, for we certainly want to correct such an error. Phone—F. N. Fagan, Pomology

Between The Lions
WITH DICK PETERS

They're Off

Needless to say Bucknell is in town again. Yes, that Thundering Herd from up Lewisburg way is making its annual appearance in State College to help Penn State's Nittany Lions inaugurate a brand-new, shiny football season.

Whether that shiny season will be marred 24 hours from now I doubt very much, but things somehow don't always go the way we think they will: If you remember only two years ago, these same Bucknellians came, saw, and conquered a much favored State team, 14-0.

Last year they led the Nittany bunch by three points until the fourth quarter, when a little guy named Petrella took the matter into his hands and said, "Look here, boys, this will never do." So Mister Petrella went on a personal inspection tour of the Bisons and when he finished, the Lions had come off with a well-squeezed 13-3 victory.

Today I believe that Penn State will be fielding a much stronger eleven than the Humphreys gang—one stronger in the weight chart, in versatility, in speed, and above all, in reserves. Therefore, it is only my constitutional right of freedom of speech and press that allows me to say that Penn State should beat Bucknell this afternoon by at least three touchdowns.

Boasting an average of .800 to date in gridiron predictions, and realizing that things in the selecting racket are getting tougher every week, here are nine other games to watch today:

- Georgia to take South Carolina.
- Pitt to surprise Missouri.
- NYU to batter Lafayette.
- Northwestern to squeeze through over Syracuse.
- Case to trample Lehigh.
- Duke to hairline over Tennessee.
- Cornell to move in on Colgate.
- Southern California to edge Oregon State.
- West Virginia to upset Fordham.

Detroit Beats Reds 7-4, In Third Game

Special to the Daily Collegian
DETROIT, Oct. 4 — Displaying the same climax punch that won the American League pennant, the Detroit Tigers scored six runs in the seventh and eighth innings to beat Cincinnati, 7-4, in the third game of the World Series. Detroit now leads, 2-1, in the series tally.

Rudy York and Pinky Higgins smashed home runs off Jim Turner, the losing hurler. Hank Greenberg hit a three-bagger.
