Between The Lions

WITH DICK PETERS

Pipe-Dreaming

Before beginning on the contents herein, let it be known that this writer is not a marihuana addict, neither is he a slave to opium, morphine, or cocaine. What follows is a product of only an uncontrollable imagination which gets loose like Pepper Petrella at times.

Anyway, with all the talk floating around about Penn State going through undefeated in football this year, and whether or not the Lions would go to some "bowl" game, if they did come through unbeaten, I sat down, just for fun and doped it out this way:

In the East there remain, besides the Nittany aggregation in the clean-slate class, Cornell, Navy, Boston College, Georgetown, and Lafayette. Should the Lions trounce their four remaining foes, how would they rate in bowl bids with the above mentioned Eastern leaders?

Cornell, in this guy's book, is the best in the land, and won't have much difficulty easing through from here undefeated. But, it isn't the Big Red's policy to accept post-season games.

Navy, even though they should turn back Penn and Notre Dame in their next two games, which is near impossible, wouldn't play in a New Year's battle.

Boston College and Georgetown do battle with each other next month, which should eliminate one of them, that is, if one of the teams wins the game. (A startling deduction, that last one.)

Conceding Lafayette a good chance to finish up their slate in the black, Penn State would be favored for a "bid" over the Leopards because the Lions play a tougher schedule.

Thus, the process of reduction leaves only State and the victor of the Boston College-Georgetown game in the East as possible contenders for an "after-dinner" affair, all of which makes things look kind of rosy.

Heck, with a little encouragement from someone, I'd stick my toothbrush in my pocket, grab a sandwich, and head for Miami, New Orleans, or Pasadena any time now.

Gamecocks Considered Tough By Scout Michaels

Still one of the six remaining undefeated and untied football teams in the East, the Nittany Lions put in their second session of practice yesterday as they prepared for the season's only intersectional game with South Carolina this Saturday.

Backfield coach Al Michaels has brought back glowing reports about the Gamecocks despite their losses to Georgia, Duquesne, and Clemson. In their last tilt, the Southerners held the vaunted Clemson team to a 20 to 13 score.

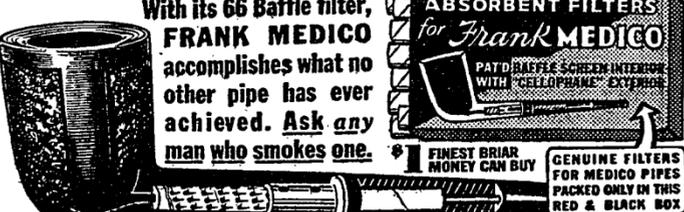

Jordan And Irvin Halls IM Football Victors

Jordan Hall, last year's independent intramural football champions, paved the way for another undefeated season by downing Frazier A.C. by a 6-0 score Monday night.

In the second football match held on Monday night, Irvin Hall won from a stubborn B.R.B. aggregation by a technical decision of 1 down. B.R.B. led in the number of first downs up until the latter part of the second half when a series of long passes put Irvin Hall in the lead with 5 first downs to B.R.B.'s 4.
