Blitzkrieg Hits Buckhout Lab

A blitzkrieg has struck Buckhout Laboratory. There's no need to run for shelter, however, for its a scientific blitzkrieg and won't harm anyone.

The whole thing started last September when J. Ben Hill, professor of botany, was writing a textbook on genetics. Getting the notion one day that his work wasn't progressing fast enough, Dr. Hill drew what he calls his Blitzkrieg Map on the blackboard of the lab where he works.

A red-brick fort occupies the center of the map. On guard at the top is a soldier in a green uniform, and a Nazi flag flying over it.

Around the fort are curved lines, some very close to the fort and others some distance away. Each curve is labeled with the name and chapter in the genetics textbook. Dr. Hill says that when the book is finished, all the curved lines will have reached the fort and taken it captive.

Some dive bombers and cannons represent enemies that keep the work from completion. One is labeled "Captain Interruptions," another "Vacation Dive Bomber." A cloud has been labeled "General Fog," and the commander-in-chief of the whole enemy army is "General Inertia."

We, The Women— Soldiers Are Not Always Right

Received your socks, lady Very fine fit Used one for a hammock One for a mit Glad to know you are doing your bit But in the meantime, lady Where in hell did you learn to knit?

THE ABOVE verse, contributed by Mr. Nelson W. Taylor, chairman of the State College British War Relief Society, aptly describes some of the coed endeavors to furnish clothing for the soldiers of Britain. All of the garments do not result in hammocks, however. If you follow the instructions the result is surprisingly wearable.

AFTER seeing the lion dressed in a fur coat, ear muffs, and skis at the NYU game, a lot of people wondered where the greased pig was hiding. Funny how many animals the lion resembles.
