We, The Women— Preferential Ballots Save Time And Trouble

Now that the tumult and the shouting of last week's pledging have died down, sorority women, pledges, and those who didn't "go" have settled back to the normal order of things. With parties to plan, parties to attend, and parties to clean up—to say nothing of innumerable coke dates squeezed in every free second—the whole 10 days of formal rushing proved a nightmare of hustle and bustle. Sunday's bidding came as welcome relief.

Sorority women, as a result, have voiced one cry, "Rushing took too much time." The thing they have failed to realize is that this year more than ever before, rushing lists for many houses were nearly identical. Greeks worked harder because competition was keener, not because the period was longer nor the Rushing Code stiffer.

Possible solution to this criticism might be the institution of a preferential ballot system which has already received favorable comment from sororities. Under this plan, rushees would fill out a ballot at the end of the first week of formal rushing indicating the two or three houses which they are considering. Since few, if any, women would change their preferences and add new ones in the remaining time, the proposal appears quite feasible. At this point in rushing, most women have only to decide between two or three houses.

Advantages of such a plan would permit houses to know which rushees need concentration and which are hopeless. Instead of wearing themselves out by trying to rush a large list as a sort of insurance policy against losing out altogether, houses, knowing where they stood, could have smaller but surer lists.

Panhellenic's Rushing Committee together with newly-elected pledge presidents will begin revision of the Rushing Code in the near future. Let it keep mind that every sorority with which this preferential ballot plan has been discussed so far has given its whole-hearted approval.

Graduate Student Wins Wiley Memorial Award

Peter C. Duisberg, graduate student in agricultural and biological chemistry at the College, has been awarded one of the three Wiley Memorial Awards for 1940. The award, $200 in cash, was based on a research paper he completed while a senior at Penn State last year.

Duisberg devoted his research to a comparison of the Hanus and Rosenmund Kuhnemann methods for the determination of iodine numbers. Iodine numbers are used to determine the chemical properties of fats. For example, fats with high iodine numbers will usually dry quickly and are used in the form of oils, by the paint industry.

The Wiley Awards, sponsored by the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists in memory of Dr. H. W. Wiley, chief of the bureau of chemistry of the U. S. Department of Agriculture from 1884 to 1912, are open to seniors in chemistry at any accredited college. Only three awards are given annually.

Duisberg's research was conducted under the supervision of Dr. H. O. Triebold, professor of agricultural and biological chemistry.

Shafted Again?

With the new bus depot now located in the vicinity of the 18th hole on the College golf course it might be best for all interests concerned to forget the petty bickering and over-heated discussions that took place during the discussion of the situation.

It is not this writer's intention to take sides with any of the many factions who were for or against the removal of the bus stop. The entire situation was highly-involved and dealt with personal feelings and prejudices in many instances.

Many rumors concerning why certain people wanted or did not want the depot removed are without adequate proof, others are accompanied by a considerable amount of substantial evidence. But in either case, all stories can more easily be forgotten than they can bear being re-told.

Leitzell Right

It is unfortunate that in every situation some person must bear the brunt of public derision, in this instance namely Burgess Wilbur F. Leitzell. For a writer to scribe in behalf of Leitzell might be considered treason in a college publication, but the Burgess was only doing his job.

Nevertheless, throughout the entire proceedings the Burgess was forced to be the "goat" of criticism emanating from students, citizens, and other interests. It is true that certain ordinances have been taken lightly, but the Burgess chose to enforce this one, and perfectly within his rights after having given fair warning.

Leitzell summed up the situation completely Thursday night when he said, "Council cannot pass ordinances and then expect me not to enforce them. I don't change my mind every 24 hours."

Misrepresented?

Greyhound Bus Lines, according to Leitzell, charged that the situation had been misrepresented to them, but although that may be true, evidence of this has never been recorded in council's record.

In the meantime, the College students will suffer until July 1 when a new terminal will be erected. Until recently the students' viewpoint had not been openly considered in the matter by several of the factions involved. The College can make the best of this situation by providing a well-lighted walk and protection from the terminal to the various women's dormitories on campus, which unofficially it has been stated they will do.

As for the men students, who in many cases will walk three extra blocks to the depot, let them suffer in silence, because it is too late to remedy the situation now.
