

New Delegates Take Over Panhel

With two new representatives from each of the 12 sororities, a reorganized Panhellenic Council will take over the handling of inter-sorority problems. Old officers will be retained, however, until the Rushing Code for next year is revised and passed by the houses.

The Objective View—Ins And Outs of WSGA

By JEANNE C. STILES

Editor's note: This is the first in a series of articles to explain various aspects of WSGA here. They will cover coed regulations and enforcement, social affairs, freshman and transfer orientation, budget expenditures, and WSGA organization and purposes.

Penn State women weren't far behind women of the United States in 1919, the year women's suffrage was incorporated into the Constitution of the United States as the Nineteenth Amendment, for it was in that year Women's Student Government was inaugurated on this campus.

Since that time, women's privileges in governing themselves have increased rapidly. Today, we have the most powerful and effective student government in Pennsylvania, comparing favorably with the best in the country.

It aids the PSCA in planning the annual Brotherhood Week, provides two or three scholarships and a loan fund for deserving women, sponsors social affairs, and contributes clothes and money to Mrs. Hetzel's Emergency Fund for students.

Through representation on All-College Cabinet, which started two years ago, women are able to stand up for their rights. It is through Cabinet that women are able to have representation on College committees and determine policies governing the student body.

Representatives on the Cabinet include presidents of WSGA, WRA, Panhellenic Council, and Philotes. These women represent all coeds enrolled in the College.

It is through such representation that women have come to play such an important part in administration of student affairs and why much is accomplished for the good of women students.

We, The Women Rushing Progresses Under Alert Group

Congratulations to a wide-awake, energetic rushing committee which after two weeks of intensive planning has evolved a new Rushing Code to correct the worst features of this year's system in an attempt to answer the criticisms of faculty and administration.

By proposing the controversial between-semester rushing as a panacea for this year's ills, the committee is attempting to prove to sorority women that the plan is feasible, that it is commendable, and that it should be acceptable.

Because rushing under this plan would begin the day after final examinations and continue through registration to the first day and a half of classes, the most intensive period would take place during a time devoted to rushing and nothing else. With no classes to attend, or rather to cut, with no assignments to prepare, and with mornings in which to sleep, freshmen and sorority women could emerge with much less strain and nervous tension, without three or four chapters of back reading in every course.

Freshmen by popular consent were hardest hit by the mad rush this year and came out of it a sorry lot with work piled sky high. Certainly, any step to correct this will be in the right direction.

Sacrifice of mid-semester vacation is the chief cry of sorority women against the plan. All but seniors have forgotten that mid-semester vacations are relatively new, that three years ago, students went directly from finals into classes.

Only other serious objection to the proposal is that the strain of finals requires a rest before rushing is attempted, but the great majority of women have finished their exams during the first week; others have only one or two at the most during the second week. Previous classes suffered no ill effects without a vacation. Have we become weaker?

By removing the unrushed freshmen from the scene, damaged feelings will be avoided or at least alleviated, and the pain will be short-lived.

Added consideration for transfer women who were forced to live in dormitories surrounded by sorority women this year without associating with them has been extended by allowing them to visit and be visited in dormitory rooms—another progressive feature to come forth from a progressive committee.

Senior Petition Gets Second Class Meeting

Upon receipt of a petition signed by 30 senior coeds, WSGA president Elinor L. Weaver '41, last night announced that another meeting will be held Wednesday to reconsider the six honor women who will take part in Class Day exercises.

Holding that the dissention which had arisen since the six women were named Wednesday night was sufficient to hold a second meeting, and assured by Dean of Women Charlotte E. Ray that "another meeting could be held if enough unfavorable comments were voiced," the petitioners asked senior women to reconsider which six women "have contributed most to the College."

Only second semester seniors who will graduate in June are eligible to vote, Miss Weaver explained.
