

New All-College Election Seen

SPECIAL COMMITTEE, headed by Chaplain John H. Frizzell, above, has recommended that a vote be taken in chapel to decide whether offerings shall continue to go to Lingnan University or be divided with a local charity.

Vote Planned On Chapel Fund

President Ralph D. Hetzel approved yesterday a recommendation by a special advisory committee that he sanction a vote by chapel-goers in order to settle the controversy over All-College Cabinet's authority to divert chapel collections from Lingnan University.

At its meeting last night, Cabinet did not act on the plan. Dr. Ralph L. Watts, chairman of the Penn State in China committee, said that members of the special committee from his group were given full power to act and that approval by the full Penn State in China committee would not be necessary.

Under the plan, a series of five votes will be taken in chapel between October 12 and December 7. The result will determine whether offerings will continue to go to Lingnan or be divided with a local charity.

The recommendation was

Rep. Moul Completes Investigation Of College

HARRISBURG, May 20.—Rep. Clayton Moul (D., York) said today that his investigation of the Soil Conservation Board and the agriculture extension of the Pennsylvania State College was finished and that he would present a final report on it to the House tomorrow.

No Penn State bills were reported out of committee in the House although 44 other appropriation measures—including bills for Pitt, Temple and Penn—were passed unanimously and sent to the Senate. It was reported that the Penn State bills would come out of committee either Thursday or Monday.

Lodge Funds Still Insufficient

Progress on the proposed Mountain Lodge was interrupted again last night when all bids for construction of the cabin were reported to the Recreational Coordinating Committee as being $2,000 or more above the available $6,700.

Although the total amount available is $7,300, only $6,700 can be used for actual construction. The rest is being held to buy the land, for the water supply and possibly to build a road. The proposed site for the lodge is near the ski trail.

The original fund, $5,300, was donated by the class of 1939, and as that proved insufficient, All-College Cabinet answered a request for additional funds with $2,000 from the Interclass Sports Fund.

Even with this additional money, plans were made out twice and each time the bids turned in were too high. Last night's bids were in answer to a further revision of specifications in which the originally planned dormitories were left out.

The committee now has two alternatives to work on: either raise more money or again cut the plans. There is a possibility that nothing more will be done until next fall.

TWO HONORS came to J. Burn Helme, head of the fine arts department, yesterday with the announcement of his appointment as chairman of a jury to select sculpture for the York post office, and the publication in Parnassus, art magazine, of his article "The Paintings of Hobson Pittsman."

In The First World War—

College Campus Was Like Army Camp

By GORDON COY

Surveys show it, national leaders predict it—everything points to the fact that the United States seems to be drawing closer to the theatre of World War No. 2. "Just how much will the crisis affect college life?" students query. Already, the draft shows possibilities of cutting inroads into campus organization.

Students may get the best idea of what to expect in case of war, if they delve back through records concerning Penn State and the first World War. In a series of three articles, The Daily Collegian will give the background for the statement made recently by Prof. John H. Frizzell, College chaplain, who said, "The campus was practically an armed camp in 1917 and 1918."

Immediately following America's entry into the World War, the Board of Trustees placed the entire facilities of the College at the disposal of the government. Being a Land Grant College, Penn State already had military training on the campus and was not faced by a problem as difficult as most colleges, which had to provide army training for the first time.

On the campus, students were trained under the S. A. T. C.—Students' Army Training Corps. Barracks were built to house civilians who came to the College for regular camp training as well as additional preparation received from special college courses.

What is now Holmes Field was Penn State's own "no-man's land" in 1917. Trenches were dug, dummies were set up to provide bayonet practice, and in several months the campus virtually became an armed camp.

Strangely enough, costs did not vary much for students, although a slight increase was introduced at the dining commons. Members of the faculty and administration were hardest hit by rising prices, as their wages remained the same while living costs in town rose from 25 to 50 per cent.

Amendment Passed To Allow Vote Next Fall

Cabinet unanimously accepted a constitutional amendment last night that will provide for new All-College elections next fall if both President Robert D. Baird '42, and Vice-president Gerald F. Doherty '42, are drafted.

The amendment reads, "In the event of the disqualification or resignation of both the All-College president and vice-president, an election for All-College president shall be held within four weeks of the regular College session after the disqualification or resignation of the old officers go into effect."

Under the old provision, the senior class president would have become head of student government as chairman of Cabinet until the end of the term.

Cabinet also endorsed the following appointments to Student Tribunal made by President Baird: Thomas R. Heidecker '43, George M. Rumsey '43, J. Lee Clovis '42, George R. Ross '42, Richard N. Stevenson '42, and Robert A. Wasser '42.

Richard E. Haskell '42, chairman of the Student Radio Committee, appeared before Cabinet to receive its endorsement of the proposed 5,000 watt, non-commercial College radio station. Cabinet, however appointed a new committee that will meet with the radio committee to confer with President Ralph D. Hetzel concerning the feasibility of fulfilling the request, Cabinet will then change its meeting room to the plan. The Cabinet committee includes Jerome H. Blakeslee '43, H. Leonard Krouse '42, James W. Ritter '42, and Betty L. Zeigler '42.

A motion was accepted asking the College to install office equipment.
